Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

CROFT & ALLEN CO. PHILADELPHIA Pennsylvania . .

You Wouldn't Stand It!

¶ Merchants wouldn't stand in other lines what they stand in buying future canned goods—buying a certain quantity and getting half of it.

¶ Buy Blue Bell or Clover Farm canned goods and get all you buy. Doesn't that appeal to you? We sell these goods to the jobber on 100 per cent. delivery contracts, and he will sell them to you in the same way.

¶ These brands are the best canned goods packed in Maryland.

Help the Housekeeper if You Want to Hold Her Trade ::

Most housekeepers have a lot of trouble getting brooms that please them—you know how particular they are. We are making brooms to catch the trade of this class of people. Is there any doubt in your mind that you can sell such brooms—and keep on selling them? If there is we will dispel it.

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

All The CORN But The Bad Part

Our Winorr Brand of Canned Corn has never failed, once it has been introduced.

One thing, it is a novelty—it gives the dealer something to talk about, and the consumer something new to eat.

Winorr is the tender kernels of the finest corn grown. It makes no difference how fine corn is—the hulls are indigestible and tough.

By a special device we leave them on the cob and can only the meat. It is far and away the most delicious corn packed.

We also pack a full line of finest quality Berries and Vegetables, moist and condensed Mince Meat, Catsup and Salad Dressing.

We are the largest canners of Sauer Kraut in the United States.

Read the Point In Large Type

Here's the proposition of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet in a nutshell:—

1. It is the cleanest rennet made.
2. It coagulates milk in 2 to 5 minutes.
3. It will not spoil.
4. Every bottle is guaranteed.
5. Jobbers everywhere indorse it.

And last, but not least—this is in large type because it's a large point—it pays 100 per cent. profit. Costs $1.50, sells for $3.00.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

A Household Word

If you were to say to any woman who came into your store, "What is Ariosa?" She would answer instantly, "Why that's Arbuckles' Coffee." Why? There is only ONE answer. It is the best package coffee ever sold at the price, and it is the most extensively advertised. Ariosa is a product you don't have to sell, you simply put it in stock and take orders for it.

Fix-tures That Sell Goods

Store Fixtures are not inaminate things, that is, they ought not to be—they have a real selling ability. Take this 5-jar fixture for pickles, olives or anything that will go in a jar. Comes either in oak or cherry, nickel trimmings. Finely made and handsome.

Convenient, sightly and a real help in the sale of goods. Surprisingly moderate in price.

U. S. GOVERNMENT INSPECTION OF ALL OUR GOODS

Be Proud of Your Olive Oil

You may remember the recent tests which the United States Government made into all brands of imported olive oil.

Those tests (Government Bulletin 77, page 55) proved Nicelle Olive Oil to be superior to all the other brands tested. Nicelle Oil is made and bottled in Nice, France. It is the highest type of pure olive oil producible.

Sell olive oil you can be proud of. There are so many brands you can't.

Maybe Your Competitor's Thinking of It Even Now

¶ We tried Gurnse butter first on the Philadelphia retail trade, and it has gone so well there that we're convinced now we've got a splendid thing.

¶ Don't let your competitor be the first to get Gurnse butter, because as sure as you live he's going to do business with it. It's a splendid butter! The fanciest dairy butter possible to make. Carefully tended at every stage until packed in brine-dipped paper and wrapped in the handsome Gurnse cartons.

¶ If our inspectors were paid a dollar for every bad pound they found, they couldn't be keener than they are.

¶ Gurnse butter never varies—don't forget that either.

Packed in 30 and 50-pound boxes—pound and half pounds—32 cents.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

FULTON & WALKER CO. TWENTIETH and FILBERT STS. PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.

"Show All—Sell All"

This is the idea of a store like this. Notice that everything is where customers can see it. These bins protect you from loss by dust, dirt or bugs. A bin full of sugar shows it is sugar, makes people want sugar, and keeps every grain of sugar in clean, salable condition. Let us make an estimate for you.

The STEEL FRUIT JAR CAP from the Chemist's Viewpoint

Prof. Chas. T. P. Fennel, the famous Cincinnati chemist, says that a steel fruit jar cap submitted to the influence of organic acids, such as are contained in fruits, do not corrode as much as zinc caps. He further says that resulting salts from this corrosion in the case of the steel cap are absolutely harmless, and that those from the zinc caps are poisonous to the human system.

If you tell this to your customers you can sell a lot of our steel caps.

DOLLARS IN RETAILERS' POCKETS

Hundreds of Manufacturers and Jobbers of High-grade Standard Selling Goods are offering

UNIVERSAL COUPON CERTIFICATES TO RETAIL DEALERS

as an inducement to push the sales of their goods to consumers. These certificates are given at no increase in the selling prices, or cheapening of quality in their products, but are intended solely as a compensation for your assistance, and are exchangeable through us for valuable and useful merchandise, of which the following list represents a few of the

1000 ARTICLES TO CHOOSE FROM

Pianos	Harness	Buggies	Silverware	Typewriters	Scales	Lamps
Coffee Mills	Safes	Leather Goods	Strong Boxes	Wagons	Trucks
Desks	Tools	Chinaware	Jewelry	Furniture	Sporting Goods
Rubber Goods	Watches	Cut Glass	Toilet Articles	Trunks	Rugs	Clocks

Any retailer taking advantage of this liberal offer is simply putting extra dollars into his pocket, as the cost to him is absolutely nothing but represents a saving of 15 to 60 per cent. over the cost if he were to buy them in the regular retail way.

It's a Hard Job, but We've Done It

You know how hard it is to please all your customers with coffee. It is natural for you to find it harder than we do, because you have a lot of things to do and we do nothing else. Private Estate Coffee is the result of many years' experimenting to please the popular taste, and it does it so well that we don't know of a grocer who has induced a customer to try it who isn't still using it. This is one important reason for your making a leader of it, and another is that we share our profits with you by giving you Universal Coupons with every case.

Are You in a Sauce Rut?

Many grocers drift into the rut of selling only one or two old-time sauces, and then wonder why it is they don't sell a bottle of sauce a week.

The modern sauce is Tabasco Sauce. A lively appetizing sauce made of the far-famed tabasco pepper of Louisiana. The best is Moss Green Heart Tabasco Sauce, made by the New Iberia Extract of Tabasco Pepper Co., of New Iberia, Louisiana.

This sauce captivates everybody who likes sauce at all, and many who never liked sauce before. Think about it a little.

NO SILVER POLISH CAN LIE

No silver polish can deceive its users after the first using. If it scratches, or gives a dull polish, or gives a good polish only after hard work everybody will know it for the worthless thing it is and never use it again.

Only for one reason has it been possible for Electro-Silicon to build up the largest silver polish trade in the world—it gives better results than other polishes. Better in two ways—first, by giving a more brilliant polish. Second, by giving it with far less labor than any other polish on the market.

Not one of your customers but has heard of Electro-Silicon, packed in the yellow box with lady in red on the cover.

Test Them, That's How

How shall you know what brand of flavoring extracts to sell? Test them—it's not hard to judge extracts. Take our Waldorf Lemon and Vanilla, which we claim to be just a little finer than the others. Give them all the practical cooking tests you like—let your wife do it. Then try the others you think may be better or as good as Waldorf, and see what they do.

You'll find what everybody else has found—that Waldorf Extracts give a certain fineness and delicacy of flavor that no others can.

You Are the One That Gets Hurt

When you sell your customers a low-priced coffee. You are taking chances unless it's ARIOSA, because it is very difficult to get a good quality of coffee at a low price and yet have the flavor always the same.

You can't afford to take chances. We buy in larger quantities than any five concerns in the country, and we can afford to give quality and make a price that nobody can duplicate.

Both Perfect and Uniform

Gurnse Butter has two qualities that we talk about a good deal—1, superfine quality; and 2, reliability and uniformity.

It's hard to say which the grocer thinks more important in butter, but if there is any difference we believe that uniformity is the more important. Every grocer knows how dangerous to his business it is to have the second shipment of butter poorer than the first.

But with Gurnse Butter it isn't necessary to choose between these two good qualities, for Gurnse Butter embodies both. It is the finest dairy butter possible to produce, inspected rigidly at every stage, and it keeps that way always.

You and your customers can handle one pound of Gurnse with perfect confidence that it will be exactly like that other pound that suited perfectly.

Packed in 30 and 50-pound boxes—pound and half pounds—28 cents.

Prices subject to market change.

Pennsylvania Appeal Court Decides Raisin Case in Duff & Son's Favor

Complicated Controversy Between Firm Named and Williamsport Jobbing House Over Excess Price on Car of California Raisins Sold in 1905 is Decided in Plaintiff's Favor. History of the Case.

A most interesting case involving the sale of a car of raisins has just been decided by the Superior Court of Pennsylvania. The plaintiffs were P. Duff & Sons, wholesale grocers of Pittsburg, Pa., and the defendants F. B. Thrall & Co., jobbers, of Williamsport. The plaintiffs won the case.

During the summer of 1905 the defendants ordered through plaintiffs a car of raisins of the crop of 1904, to be shipped directly from the Pacific coast to defendants. The price was to be one-half cent per pound less than the price of the new crop then nearly ready for the market. The price for the new crop is fixed each year, in the early fall, by the Raisin Growers' Association of California. This order, when received by plaintiffs, was by them, with the knowledge of defendants, transmitted by wire to the packers on the coast and by them accepted, on condition that the car should be shipped before the middle of September, and with the understanding that if at the time of shipment the price for the new crop had not yet been fixed an adjustment would be made so as to make the price conform to that the defendants offered to pay, viz., one-half cent per pound less than the new price.

The point agreed on for delivery to the defendant was "f. o. b. coast." The car was duly consigned and shipped on September 7th. On the next day plaintiffs advised defendants of that fact and inclosed a bill covering the entire order, which had included another car of assorted fruit. This bill, which plaintiffs call an "invoice" or "estimate" aggregated $2,397.01, and a draft for this amount was drawn and forwarded for collection to the bank in Williamsport, where it was held awaiting the arrival of the car. The prices in this bill were those named by the Western shipper and, as between him and plaintiffs, were clearly subject to adjustment when the price of the new crop should thereafter be fixed.

On October 5th the price of the new crop was fixed by the association and on the same day plaintiffs sent a circular letter to all of their customers advising them of this action and giving them the new price. It will be observed that at this time the car of raisins had not yet reached Williamsport. On October 10th this was followed by another letter from plaintiffs inclosing a corrected or adjusted bill, at the price fixed by the contract, which aggregated $349.49 more than the original bill or estimate, and defendants were asked to substitute this for the former one, and advised that a corrected draft was being forwarded to the bank.

The car arrived at Williamsport certainly not later than October 10th, and after unloading it the defendants, on the 11th, paid at the bank the original draft for $2,397.01.

The defendants declined to pay the balance of $349.49, and this action was begun for its recovery. At the trial a verdict was rendered for the plaintiffs, but judgment was afterwards entered for the defendants, and this appeal followed. The defendants, conceding that they received the goods ordered, and that they have not yet paid the contract price, resisted any further payment.

They contended first that by their letter of July 29th they reserved the right to cut down the quantity of raisins if the price should be too high. The material portion of that letter is as follows: "In order to secure Santa Clara prunes we have decided to make up a car of prunes and fill out with peaches, and also take a solid car of raisins, subject, of course, to the opening price. In case they should be too high we may decide to cut it down, but in all probability that will not be necessary. However, we want that privilege, should such be the case." This contention the court overuled.

Finally the defendants contended they had the right to assume that the prices named for the raisins in the first bill were the ultimate contract prices; that acting on this assumption they had sold 300 boxes of them before the receipt of the plaintiffs' letter of October 10th inclosing the adjusted or corrected bill; that they then offered to rescind as to the balance of the carload, and hold that portion of the goods subject to plaintiffs' order, and this offer having been declined, they allege they have discharged every liability imposed by their contract. This contention the court also overuled.

The appeal court decided the case entirely in favor of the plaintiffs, closing its decision as follows:—

> Thus it would appear that the false position taken by the defendants rested not on any failure of duty on the part of the plaintiffs, but on the fact that they themselves overlooked or failed to note the information obtained in the circular letter of October 5th. The correspondence shows, as we view it, every element of a contract between the parties, which has been fairly and fully performed by the plaintiffs according to its terms; but the evidence fails to disclose any sufficient reason why they should lose a considerable part of the contract price. The learned court below was right therefore in directing a verdict for the plaintiffs, but was led into error in refusing to enter judgment thereon.

Disastrous Canned Apple Season.

Brands Which Brought $3.50 Last Fall Sold this Week at $1.85. Hard Times Hit the High Prices Hard. Holders Make Heavy Losses.

The slump which has overtaken the canned apple market since last fall is a striking example of the tumble which values in many lines of merchandise have taken within the last few months.

Last fall standard brands of New York State gallon apples sold in a large way at $3.50 per case. During the past week sales of the same brands have been made at $1.85. And while holders hope that the bottom has been reached, it is by no means certain that it has been. There has been a corresponding decline in 3-pound apples, though that size cuts very little figure compared with gallons.

The cause of this extreme decline in a few months is two-fold. First, the general depression which produced the second, inability to pay the high prices asked last fall. At an asking price of $3.50 or anything like that, bakers, who are large users of canned apples, found it cheaper to use green apples, which were selling at a price equivalent to about $2 a dozen for gallon cans. This greatly reduced the demand for the canned article and brought the jobbers' and bakers' supply people into spring with heavy stocks. In order to move them, therefore, they are sacrificing them at a price which means a heavy loss to every holder.

As a matter of fact, the canned apple season just ending has been the most disastrous for years. It is estimated that the shrinkage in apple values, between what the farmer got for his green fruit and what the packer was able to get for the same fruit after canning, was $10,000,000. It cost the packer $2.65 a dozen to pack gallon apples last year, against an average cost of $1.75. This was because the green fruit buyers forced the price up. They did not succeed in holding it up, however, for the green fruit market subsequently went all to pieces, and holders in that branch lost heavily also.

The average selling price of New York gallon apples is $2.10 to $2.25.

National Retailers' Committee See President.

A committee from the National Association of Retail Grocers, which recently met in Boston, called on the President on Monday to ask him to issue an order compelling civil service employees who contract debts to pay them. The committee was headed by John A. Green, secretary of the association. The President requested that a statement in writing be submitted, which will be done.

Warning Against Mercantile Tax Repeal Solicitors

State Association has Evidence that Solicitors are Falsely Representing Themselves as Agents of Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association. Erie Merchants are Building Wall Against Soliciting Schemes.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., May 21, 1908.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania has no agents in the field soliciting funds for legislative purposes. Attention is called to the following statement from H. C. McConahy, secretary of the Merchants' Association at Tyrone, Pa.:—

> Two very nicely dressed men, representing themselves to be agents of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, in an indirect manner, came into our place of business this P. M. and in a very great hurry. They asked Mr. Templeton to sign a petition for the repeal of the mercantile tax law, presenting three petitions. He was very busy at the time and thinking it might be a good thing at least signed their petitions and was asked for a subscription, whereupon he gave them $2. They secured money from a number of firms in our town. Later when the petition was presented to another party here they had $10 set opposite our firm name, evidently having raised it for the purpose of making others believe we had paid that amount. As I am aware our State association does not have men out with these petitions we believe this is a fraud. Will you kindly investigate and notify the trade papers, or warn the associations.

At no time in our association's history have we thought it necessary to solicit funds for legislative purposes other than our natural revenues from entrance fees, capita tax and printed forms. Should it be necessary at any time to do so, the appeal will be made direct to the members of our associations through their local executive officers. Local executives are advised to warn their members not to make contributions for legislative work in any other way—unless they have money to burn.

The Grocers' Credit Exchange of Erie is tightening credit lines to meet present business conditions. No credit will be extended to persons with unsatisfactory credit records. New customers will be required to produce a receipted pass book or clearance card from the store with which they last traded. No credit will be extended without security. The exemption waivers of the State Association are considered satisfactory security. The carrying forward of balances and the extension of credit for longer than thirty days will be discontinued.

The Erie Business Men's Exchange recently adopted the following rules governing the patronizing of schemes by members:

1. Each member will be furnished on application for display a card. "Notice to Solicitors. Members of the Erie Business Men's Exchange do not patronize solicitors who are not indorsed by its committees. For indorsement call secretary's office, 210 Lincoln Building."

2. No restrictions shall be imposed upon members contributing to organizations in which they hold membership.

3. No indorsement will be given to any organization using raffles, lotteries, schemes of chance, or similar means of raising money.

4. No indorsement will be given to any organization of unsatisfactory credit standing.

The Wilkes-Barre merchants have instructed the association officers to confer with the employers of the city and ask them to consider the advisability of the posting of notices to the effect that employees are required to pay their bills. It is believed that the moral effect of such a notice would reduce the number of cases of delinquents in treatment to a minimum and be to the mutual advantage of employer, merchant and customers.

One Successful Way of Limiting Prices

A Useful Set of Forms Used by a Western Condensed Milk Co. to Compel the Wholesaler and Retailer to Sell at Fixed Prices. Plan Rests on Making the Agreement to Hold the Price a Condition of All Sales.

To the manufacturers who contend that they are helpless against department stores and other retail dealers who cut their prices and thus disorganize trade, the "Grocery World" submits the plan of limiting prices which is used by the Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co. There is nothing especially new about the principle on which it is based—that of making the holding of the price a condition of the sale, but it has been worked out pretty well, and is worthy of consideration.

Across the face of every invoice that accompanies a sale from the company to jobbers is printed the following:—

CONDITIONS OF THIS SALE.

N. B.—These goods are sold on the following conditions (which are a part of the consideration of this sale):—

1. That the goods shall not be resold to the retail trade for less than the price from time to time fixed by the manufacturer.

2. That on every sale of Carnation Brand Sterilized Evaporated Milk to a retailer, the wholesaler shall, for the benefit of the manufacturer, make it a condition of the sale (as a part of the consideration) that the retailers shall maintain the retail price of the goods as fixed by the manufacturer, namely, 10 cents per can of twenty gross ounces, or 55 cents for six cans, and shall print such conditions legibly on the invoice.

3. That if these goods be resold to a wholesaler, the sale shall be made upon the same conditions as this sale, reserved for the benefit of the manufacturer.

The present price from wholesaler to retailer is fixed at:—

1 to 4 cases, per case.....$4.05
5 to 24 cases, per case..... 4.00
25 to 99 cases, per case..... 3.95
100 cases or over, per case.... 3.90

PACIFIC COAST CONDENSED MILK CO.

Across the invoice that represents a sale from jobber to retailer is stamped with a rubber stamp the following:—

(Rubber stamp on Jobber's Invoice to Retail Merchants.)

CONDITIONS OF THIS SALE.

N. B.—The Carnation Brand Sterilized Evaporated Milk herein invoiced is sold upon the condition (reserved for the benefit of the manufacturer in accordance with the seller's contract and as part of the consideration of this sale) that the goods shall not be retailed for less than 10 cents (straight) per can of twenty gross ounces, or six cans for 55 cents.

(Name of Wholesaler.)

In addition to the above an additional notice is packed in the cases of condensed milk as they are packed:—

(Notice to go in cases as packed.)

CONDITIONS UPON WHICH THESE GOODS ARE SOLD.

N. B.—The goods contained in this case are sold by the manufacturer to the wholesaler, and by the wholesaler to the retailer upon the condition, reserved for the manufacturer's benefit, that the retailer shall not sell the goods for less than 10 cents (straight) per can, or six cans for 55 cents of twenty gross ounces. The acceptance of these goods shall be sufficient evidence that the purchaser is familiar with this condition and will comply therewith

Nothing in the above condition shall prevent the retailer from selling at a price in excess of 10 cents per can when warranted by costs of transportation or other local conditions.

The word "compound" on a bottle or can of olive oil is a sufficient indication that the merchant selling it does not represent it to be "pure." This is the substance of an opinion filed in the Montgomery County Court on Monday last. Sabatto Chickerina was haled into court by representatives of the Pure Food Department because he was selling at a low price olive oil, which, upon analysis, proved to be cottonseed oil with but 10 per cent. of olive oil in its make-up. He was fined by the Magistrate and an appeal taken. The court found as follows: "It is argued that the word 'blended,' found on the label, condemns the package. We must take the case stated as we find it. No doubt there are various grades of olive oil, and hence a mixture of like substances may follow, which is properly termed a blend. The olive oil was placed on sale as a compound, and the word was plainly stated on the package.

William H. Anthony a produce dealer, of Allentown, Pa., has filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission against the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, alleging unjust and excessive freight charges for carrying potatoes to New England. He states that the rate of potatoes from Allentown to New England points is $3.40 a ton, while cement is carried for $1.55, both being shipped in box cars. He asserts that points on other railroads within a radius of 25 miles make a rate of $2.80 a ton on potatoes to New England, and asks for restoration of 60 cents a ton on the 50 carloads he has shipped during the season. Another case is being prepared in which the potato rates to Newark, Paterson and Jersey City from Allentown are declared to be excessive. They range from $2.40 to $3 a ton, while cement can be shipped for 85 cents a ton.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

SELLING TOMATO CATSUP.

Good and all as the advertised catsups are, there's little money in them. Try pushing "'Our Own' brand next week. Here is a full pint bottle of the goods positively equal to any on the market, price 20 cents, with a commission of 1 cent a bottle.

Have a nice layout of butter crackers. Pour a little on one of these, and ask your customer to sample it. Be dainty about it. Ask her to notice the lack of red pepper and the absence of that vinegar taste. Refer to the real tomato flavor and the delicacy of the spices. You'll do some catsup selling, all right.

MEMORIAL DAY

comes Saturday. We close at noon. Store will keep open until 10 o'clock Friday night. Every order will be put up and listed this evening. Work of every nature must be completed, so when we open Saturday morning there will be nothing to do but sell goods. Advertise this Saturday closing every day to every customer.

WE HEAR COMPLAINTS

about the quality and condition of fresh vegetables delivered on orders. No excuse for this. Above all things avoid sending out wilted goods, however laudable your intention may be. Better, far better, dispose of those at a sacrifice than associate this department with questionable dealing. If in doubt about sending celery or lettuce or spinach to any one, refer the matter to the floorwalker.

NEW CHEESE.

In selling new cheese better inform your customer, who has been using the matured goods, about the character of the new article—about its extreme mildness and lack of character. This is important, as customers are not posted on the cheese condition at the present season.

SELL BUTTER.

Now that the drop has come in butter let us push out plenty of the fine Elgin at 30 cents. Show up your 5-pound crocks at $1.43. Talk about the wonderful difference in the price now and three weeks ago. Make a whole lot of it. A good thing about a good salesman is making the most of a situation. Especially on an article so popular, so indispensable, in fact, as butter.

We've dropped the renovated to 25 cents, and It's a mighty fine piece of goods, too. But, of course, you'll use discretion about this as you would other things.

Buying Future Canned Goods by Retailers.

Mr. J. A. Lee, manager of the Steele-Wideles Co., of Chicago, Ill., has issued a statement which strongly defends the buying of future canned goods by retailers. The argument is quite lengthy, but the following paragraphs constitute the core. They are reproduced in connection with this journal's comment:—

> In buying canned goods "for delivery when packed," the retail merchant obtains the goods at a price which is based upon the actual cost of production, with a fair living profit to the canner and jobber. After such advance sales and deliveries are made, spot prices from maker to dealer or from wholesale dealer to retail dealer, are crowded up to the very last cent that the market or demand will bear.

This is not stated quite correctly. The price made on future goods is not based on the actual cost of production at all, because in January no packer knows what the cost of production next summer will be. The future price is based on what the packer thinks the cost of production will be. Having nothing to guess by, the price becomes a simple gamble.

> In buying canned goods, in advance of their manufacture, the retail merchant can, therefore, know that he is securing them at a fair valuation above cost. If he waits and buys his goods as he may need them he puts himself at the mercy of operators and manipulators who are always trying to corner the market.

For the reason above set forth the retailer cannot "know that he is buying future canned goods at a fair valuation above cost." At the time he agrees to pay the future price, he cannot know anything about it. The price may prove to have been very low and it may prove to have been very high. It is a simon pure gamble and nothing more nor less.

> A great advantage is secured by the retail grocer in contracting for canned goods in advance in obtaining uniformity and excellence of quality. The custom of contracting for canned goods futures has become so general that the packers of reputation who pack the best qualities are nearly always entirely sold up, or oversold, and if a dealer refuses to buy canned goods for future delivery and takes his chances to get spot goods, his selection and choice are frequently reduced to the surplus goods packed late in the season of inferior quality, or to products of canneries which pack poor goods and cannot therefore sell in advance; or products of new or inexperienced packers who are apt to have irregular and undesirable qualities.

If this is a contention that a retailer must buy ahead in order to get good quality canned goods, the "Grocery World" denies it flatly. There is scarcely a packer or jobber but who has a surplus of good stock to sell after his future orders are filled. In years of large or normal packs it is absolutely certain that they will have.

> The buyer of spot goods exclusively in canned goods always has irregular qualities and is constantly coming into collision with the popular preference for uniformity and regular merit. He is a market skinner, is constantly getting skinned and must find a new line of customers every few months, for it is not something cheap in food that desirable customers want, but something reliable, uniform, of good value.

From the "Grocery World's" knowledge on the subject, this is believed to be not at all in accord with the facts. While nearly all buyers buy futures, the very largest buyers, in a good season, exhaust their futures within a very few months after delivery, and start in to buy on spot. If their season has been anything like good, the chance is that they will be handling spot goods exclusively during 65 per cent. of the selling season. This means, if Mr. Lee is correct, that practically all large canned goods handlers are "market skinners" during 65 per cent. of the season, because they are selling "irregular qualities" during the whole of that time. This is so absolutely untrue as to scarcely even need denial.

> The only argument presented by those who oppose the buying and selling of future canned goods that is worthy of attention, is that there is in the custom a temptation to speculate and over-buy. This argument is not, however, to be taken seriously.

Why not? The "Grocery World" thinks that it is decidedly to be taken seriously. More, it is not by any means the only argument worthy of note. The whole present plan of selling goods that have not even been planted is in its essence ridiculous, unbusinesslike and expensive. In years when crops are good and packs large, he naturally never makes anything by having bought ahead, and in years when crop and pack are light and he would have made something, he doesn't get the goods.

Undeserved Aid.

The New York Wholesale Grocers' Association has sent to the American Sugar Refining Co., usually known as the Sugar Trust, a communication emphasizing the deplorable condition of the sugar trade and requesting the Trust's aid in placing it on a better basis. The concluding paragraph in the association's letter is as follows:—

> The general impression of the wholesale grocers is, that it would result to mutual interest of your company and the wholesale grocer, if the distribution of your product could be placed on a fair and reasonable basis, and with that end in view we invite your co-operation.

The jobbers' letter fails to say why the Trust could expect aid given jobbers now to succeed better than the aid it has extended many times before. And unless there is some chance that the present effort would produce better results, the Trust would be perfectly justified in refusing any aid at all.

Whatever may be said of the Sugar Trust, it has befriended the jobbing trade to an unprecedented degree. Controlling the sugar trade almost absolutely, it has at much expense, and with no direct benefits to itself, created and operated plans for compelling jobbers to hold a limited price on sugar, so that all could get an equal profit. It has done this several times. All of these plans eventually failed. They succeeded for a while in a way, but in every case some jobber to whom contracts and affidavits were simply things to be violated, knifed them in the back.

It will always be so, until the character of some wholesalers changes.

General Opposition to Increased Freight Rate. Retailers Discuss Manufacturers Fixing Retail Price. Tobacco Trust Fighting for Life. Small News of New York Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, May 22, 1908.

The sale of Toasted Corn Flakes at 5 cents in a New York department store, to which attention has been called editorially in the last two issues of the "Grocery World," is said to have been checked. After Siegel & Cooper announced the cut on goods which while listed as "Toasted Corn Flakes" the Kellogg Co. denies were their brand, Macy & Co. made a similar announcement, this time actually on Kellogg's goods. The Macy price was 6 cents. It was given out this week by E. W. Murphy, sales agent, that he had tried to buy the flakes at the cut prices and could not get any, so he believed that the sales at the reduced prices are no longer taking place. He also said that he was trying to learn the sources from which the stores which cut prices had been supplied and that if necessary legal proceedings would be instituted to prevent the cut rate sales.

The proposed increase in freight rates, if made effective, will naturally increase the freight charges to grocers, and it is predicted that the smaller jobber will be put to special disadvantage. On shipments of canned goods the minimum weight for carload rates is 40,000 pounds from the Pacific coast to the East, the weight limit having been increased lately 4,000 pounds. The so-called official minimum weight has been advanced from 30,000 to 36,000 pounds. The Southern minimum weight remains 30,000 pounds. This means that the buyer must take larger quantities than heretofore in order to get the benefit of the low rate given for carload lots. The small jobber will find it that much more difficult to get the low rate and will the more often find it necessary to pay the higher rates charged on shipments of less than carload lots.

New York City's jobbers, at least the large companies, have no objection to offer to the changes, but the small jobber does object. A number of the jobbers outside the city are remonstrating to the railroads against the increase in the official weights for carloads, but thus far without effect.

As to the increase in the rates themselves the advance, if made, will be paid by the jobber and the buying exchange and passed on to the retailer.

The regular meeting of the New York Retail Grocers' Union, Monday night, was enlivened by a debate on the action of the National Association at the Boston convention in relation to manufacturers fixing and maintaining minimum prices. Opinions on both sides were expressed on the question as to whether it would be advisable for New York to take advantage of the National Association's offer to assist in establishing minimum prices in any locality. Some of those present were of the opinion that the trade would be greatly benefited by the establishment of price standards—that this would be an excellent way of curbing the rate-cutting proclivities and of discouraging advertisements of a misleading character as to bargain sales.

Others argued that in a city like New York, with its varied population and differing conditions, efforts to attain anything like uniformity of prices would be fruitless and that such uniformity is not desirable here. It was pointed out that in parts of the city where rents are high and where grocers cater to a high-class trade prices of food are necessarily higher than in other localities where rents are lower and where the trade is not of so high a class.

No action was taken and the subject may be further discussed at another meeting.

The New York Association of Manufacturers' Agents met Tuesday and appointed a special committee to call on some of the grocery jobbers who have been slow or negligent in filing orders sent by the agents. It is believed that the trouble will be readily adjusted. President J. T. Austin was authorized to appoint committees to confer with committees of the Philadelphia Association and the Northeast Pennsylvania Association with reference to plans for widening the scope of the organization.

Arguments as to the right of the American Tobacco Co. to exist were heard this week in the United States Circuit Court before four judges. The case is to go to the United States Supreme Court, it is believed. The Government charges that the company is an illegal monopoly. In his argument J. C. McReynolds said that the Government is not seeking for gentle means of breaking up the company, but rather for means that would hurt and that would put an end to what are claimed to be violations of law by the company and by its allies. He said that six men, Duke, Ryan, Brady, Widener, Elkins and Payne, control the tobacco business of the entire world, except in countries where it is a government monopoly. The attorney claimed that the principal company violated not only the Sherman law, but also the earlier Wilson law, by restraining trade. He reviewed the connection of the American and British companies.

Mr. McReynolds charged that the American Tobacco Co. has obtained control of the tinfoil, the bag and the licorice root industries, and that its increasing control, directly and through allied interests, over other industries is

The company has a number of the best known lawyers in the city to defend it. The first argument on its side was made by Junius Parker, who claimed that the company in acquiring tinfoil and licorice concerns had acted legitimately for the protection of the main business and that there has been no monopoly in any line. He argued that the parent company has always acted fairly and lawfully and that its operations have proved of benefit to the tobacco growers and to the public. De Lancey Nicol then argued that the Government by suits of this kind is throttling legitimate industries and that as a result business men everywhere are crying to be let alone.

Other lawyers were to follow and the case will continue at least all week.

FRED. A. MCGILL.

Says Manufacturer Ought by All Means to Fix Retail Price

Well-known Western Grocers' Association Man Strongly Argues that the Only Way Reckless Price Cutting can be Cured is by Having Manufacturers Name the Retail Selling Price. Outlines a Plan by Which it Can Legally be Done.

[Below appears the greater portion of the address delivered by Mr. J. J. Higgins, Secretary of the Washington State Retail Grocers' Association, before the National Convention of Retail Grocers in Boston last week. The subject was, "Shall the Manufacturer Make and Maintain the Minimum Selling Price of His Goods?"]

I propose to present to you three fundamental propositions, which appear to my mind absolutely unanswerable, and which I believe require this convention, in the interest of the retail grocery trade of the country, not only to adopt a resolution indorsing the maintenance of minimum retail prices by the manufacturer, but to begin an aggressive campaign to secure, as soon as possible, the universal observance of that policy. I submit:—

First.—That reckless and indiscriminate price-cutting is the greatest single evil which afflicts the grocery trade to-day; and therefore the most important business before this convention is to espouse some effective and legal policy which will control that evil.

Second.—That the system of minimum retail prices maintained by the manufacturers of proprietary articles is an absolutely effective and legal method of controlling that evil; and Third.—That there is no other method of controlling the evil that is either effective or legal.

Upon the first proposition I am sure that there is no difference of opinion among us. Cut-throat competition in the form of indiscriminate price-cutting is not only the greatest single abuse from which the retail grocery trade suffers to-day, but I think it may fairly be said that all the other evils the trade is heir to do not, by their combined effect, inflict a loss upon the grocers of this country which even approaches in magnitude the tremendous losses suffered from the reckless and unjustifiable slaughter of prices.

For years our associations throughout the country have fought this evil with only indifferent success. It still hangs over the trade everywhere, and condemns the average grocer to a desperate and often fruitless struggle for existence. It has reduced the retail grocery business in many parts of the country to the lowest level of commercial hopelessness and demands an immediate and effective remedy.

Do not understand me to say that this association should espouse a policy which would prevent competition. The old saw that competition is the life of trade still remains true in all its essentials. So far as competition means keen rivalry to sell clean goods of good quality at honest weights and reasonable prices, to display them in an effective manner and to deliver them promptly, to treat customers with courtesy and serve their convenience with diligence and skill, let us have more of it, and yet more. But reckless and indiscriminate price-cutting is not competition. It is plain business suicide. It results in inevitable ruin to the merchant and in no permanent benefit to the customer, and it must be stopped. If we, who are assembled here, ignore or reject any plan to secure for the retail grocers of this country a fair return upon their labor and investments, we will fail to do our full duty as business men, and will betray the trust imposed in us by our brothers whom we represent.

Since we are all agreed upon the evil of price-cutting and the necessity of finding some way to remedy it, there remains to be considered the second and third propositions, to the effect that the system of maintaining minimum retail prices through the manufacturers is a legal and effective method of preventing indiscriminate price-cutting, and that there is no other method which will legally and effectively accomplish that end.

If our associations throughout the country have discovered any other remedy for price-cutting, why are we all crying out against that evil, deploring the ruin that is daily working among us, and struggling in desperation to minimize and circumscribe its havoc? Down in our hearts we all know that it is the one great menace of our business life, the skeleton at every grocers' feast. Would that be true if, as a body, we had found and applied an adequate and lawful remedy?

It is true that in the past we have made some headway against the evil, but our remedies have been at best only partial, and one of them of very doubtful legality. In the main we have tried two plans; we have tried them thoroughly and found them wanting. We have all tried, first, the plan of education, and some have tried the plan of coercion.

Our campaigns of education have accomplished some good. Here and there the grocers have been educated to the folly of making themselves free distributing agents for the wholesalers. But what good does that education so painfully won do a man when some crazy neighbor, perhaps a new recruit in the trade, takes it into his head to slash prices in the vain belief that he can get rich by giving his goods away. You can educate the whole city full of grocers to the wisdom and necessity for maintaining a reasonable price and then one new or stubborn idiot can compel them all to forget their dearly-bought wisdom and sell their goods below cost to protect themselves from piracy. Until an all-wise Providence shuts the gates of the grocery business against the constant invasions of the business fool, our campaigns of education will give us no protection against our common enemy, the reckless and indiscriminate cutter of prices.

The numerous instances in which the policy of coercion, of boycott and blacklist, has ran against the law proved its futility and inequity. Out of it all had come the inevitable conclusion that the only man who has a legal right to determine the retail price of the goods is the man who makes them.

As the final proposition the new, legal and effective system is that by which the manufacturer who alone has the lawful right to do so, maintains and enforces the minimum retail price at which his goods shall everywhere be sold. He does that by means of a contract entered into with the wholesalers who distribute his goods, and through the wholesalers with the retailers who buy from them. The system adopted by the Western firm which first put the system into practice is typical. The results have more than justified our fondest hopes. The plan adopted is typical. The attorney of the association drafted a series of contracts in accordance with the decisions of the courts, to be entered into by the company and the wholesaler, on the one hand, and by the company and the retailer on the other. The contract with the wholesaler binds him to sell the company's goods only to those retailers who in turn conract to maintain the minimum retail prices fixed by the company. The contract with the retailer who may purchase directly from the company obligates him to maintain that minimum scale of prices on the goods wherever purchased. That form of contract is printed on every invoice sent by either the company or the wholesaler to the retailer and is likewise packed with every box or consignment of the goods themselves.

The Crescent Co., which uses this method, has discovered three instances where cutters have violated that contract, and in each case has instituted suit against the offender for an injunction and for damages. In every one of those cases the attorneys for the defendant, upon an examination of the law, found the manufacturer's rights under such contracts so overwhelmingly supported by the decisions of the courts throughout the country that a successful defense by the offending retailer was hopeless, and the cases were immediately settled upon the company's own terms. The legal righteousness of the plan was thus early vindicated and practically no one concerned could be tempted to revert to the old plan.

It has been suggested that if the manufacturer maintains the minimum retail prices on his goods the retailer will become a mere automaton, just a kind of cash register. As an objection to a plan reasonably calculated to cure the evil of price-cutting, it is so far-fetched that it becomes ridiculous. For my part, I should be willing to become an automaton, or even a cash register, if the plan which made me one, at the same time insured me enough cash to register, and enough profit to run my auto-mechanism and perhaps my automobile. An opposition which can produce no better argument than the one we have just considered confesses its own weakness and invites defeat.

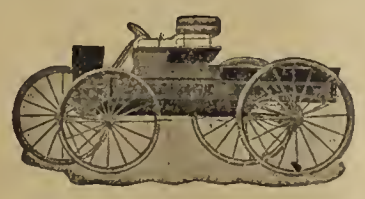
ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Helena, Mont.

At the last meeting of the Helena (Mont.) Retail Grocers' Association, the following resolutions were passed:—

Resolved, That owing to the advance in the wholesale price of groceries, and the insistence of prompt settlement by the jobbers, we are compelled to place our credits on a strictly thirty-day basis, and after April 1, 1908, no balances will be carried by us.

Resolved, That owing to the small profits now being made in our line, the practice of giving presents upon the payment of a bill will be discontinued.



Portland, Ore.

At the last meeting of the Portland (Ore.) Retail Grocers' Association, the following resolution was adopted:—

Resolved, That it be the sense of this meeting that the present weight of oat packages of two pounds be adhered to by local manufacturers, and that every member of the association do his utmost to sell local goods to the exclusion of the Eastern product.

This was inspired by the statement that a large Eastern manufacturer of rolled oats had recently reduced the size of his package.

All the cucumbers on the market are from Florida, except a few from Georgia and Charleston, and range from $1 to $1.25. The Charleston cues average $1.50 and show up a little better than the Floridas. There are too many cucumbers on the market and the demand is slow.

Do you feel as if it would be risky and reckless to give up your delivery team for a Lindsley Car?

So it would if you were taking a leap in the dark. But when it is an established fact that the Lindsley Car will do more than three teams—it will carry 1,500 pounds 30 miles on a gallon of gasoline—then the recklessness lies in not giving up the team.

Particularly when the car costs so much less to keep than the team. Less to feed, less to drive, less to keep healthy.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change whatever since a week ago. The demand is fair, without quotable change in the price of any grade. The new season for all teas is approaching, and holders of old teas are desirous of cleaning up before new teas arrive. Stocks this year, however, especially low and high grades, are much smaller than usual, and for that reason this year is not seeing as many bargains about as usual.

Coffee.

The Brazil coffee market shows no change for the week. Early in the week the syndicate controlling the valorization coffees pushed up the price of options 15 points, but left actual Rio and Santos unchanged. Later on an unconfirmed report that some syndicate coffee had been sold abroad, the market reacted. There has been no change in actual Rio or Santos coffee, and the demand for both is from hand to mouth. Mild grades are very firm and show an upward tendency. Some grades, notably Venezuelas, have advanced ¼ to ½ cent during the week. Javas and Mochas are unchanged and steady.

Sugar.

The sugar market is weak and were this any other time of year refined would almost certainly decline. Raws sold at ⅛ decline during the week and the situation seems temporarily quite soft. The fact that stocks of raws are unquestionably short of last year, however, would indicate that the weakness can be only temporary. Nevertheless it is so marked at the present time that it is not unlikely that the market may decline 10 points. The demand for refined sugar is slow.

Late in the week the refined market nominally declined 10 points, but as the refiners had been selling at the reduced price right along, the decline is of small moment.

Syrup and Molasses.

The corn market is high and firm, but glucose shows no change whatever. The fact is that glucose has for some time been high enough to allow for several advances in corn. Compound syrup is dull and unchanged. Sugar syrup is in some demand for mixing at unchanged prices. Molasses of all grades is unchanged and dull.

Fish.

The fish market is practically unchanged. The demand for mackerel is decidedly better than it was, and all grades maintain about unchanged prices. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. Domestic sardines are unchanged, no new prices having yet been made by any packer. The demand is light. Imported sardines are unchanged and light. Salmon is unchanged in price and in very moderate demand, this applying to all grades.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes are in good demand at unchanged prices. Futures are dull at the same prices which have ruled for several weeks. Corn is dull and unchanged in all grades. Possibly the market is slightly firmer, but without quotable change in any grade. Peas are weak and very dull. The outlook for the coming crop, with the exception of the Southern grades, is not particularly promising, by reason of the lateness of the season and the wet weather North and West. Prices on spot or future, however, show no effect of this as yet. Peaches are unchanged and very much demoralized, holders now, as future prices have been named, being anxious to clean up at any price in reason. New prices have been named by some packers on a basis of $1.05 for seconds yellows in a large way. This is 15 to 20 cents above a normal price, but about 70 cents below the price reached last season. Apples are also very weak, sales of New York State gallons having been made during the week at $1.85, against $3.50 last fall. The line of small Baltimore canned goods is unchanged and in light demand. California canned goods are quiet at ruling prices.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged. The market on the coast is much firmer than anywhere else. On spot they are asking around 3½-cent basis out there, and for futures 3¾ cents. In the East goods can be bought on spot at 2½ to 2¾ cents. The demand, however, is not brisk. Peaches are quiet on spot, but are selling fairly well for future delivery. Apricots can be described in the

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

same way. Many holders believe both future peaches and apricots will be lower. Currants are unchanged and dull. Raisins are weak and very quiet. Apples are dull and weak. Citron for future delivery is moving well, but the spot demand for it, as well as for figs and dates, is light.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are still firm at unchanged prices, the demand being fair. Marrows are about 5 cents per bushel higher, on account of scarcity, good demand and sympathy with pea beans. California limas are unchanged and in fair demand. Split peas have advanced 25 cents per barrel, and now command $6.75. The demand is moderate. Other grades of dried peas are firm and unchanged.

Butter.

The receipts of fresh butter have increased during the week. The quality of most of the receipts is showing grass flavor and good keeping qualities. The market early in the week declined 1 cent per pound, but recovered later and now rules unchanged. There is a very good consumptive demand and some speculative demand, and the market is now healthy. If the present weather continues, there is likely to be a good supply of butter at unchanged prices. There is, however, a strong speculative feeling, and if the weather should turn dry the make would shorten and prices would likely advance. The above applies to near-by butter as well as the Western grades.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and unchanged. New cheese is still arriving, but it doesn't show much grass flavor, and will not for about two weeks yet. Meanwhile the price will depend on the consumptive demand. There is now a normal movement, and cheese is selling about 10 per cent below a year ago. As soon as new cheese becomes full new grass there will likely be a slight advance. Old cheese is about used up and what is about is bringing a good price.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged. The quality of the present receipts is very good, and there is still some speculative demand. There will probably be no change in price during the coming week. The receipts are about normal, and the consumptive demand is good, though the market is 5 per cent. below a year ago.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are firm and unchanged. The demand is very good for regular, skinback and picnic hams, and the market throughout is healthy. Both pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged. Barrel pork has advanced $1 per barrel. There is a better demand and the producing cost is higher. Dried beef is firm at an advance of 2 cents per pound, owing to scarcity and better demand. Canned meats are unchanged and in fair demand.

Produce.

Pennsylvania potatoes, 80 to 85 cents per bushel; York State, 80 to 90 cents per bushel, demand good; sweet potatoes, $2 to $2.25 per hamper, $1 to $1.25 per basket; seconds, 50 to 60 cents per basket, demand fair; Bermuda onions, $1.25 to $1.35 per bushel crate; Texas, $1.25 to $1.35 per bushel crate; Egyptian, $2.75 to $3 per 2-bushel bag, demand good; spinach, 80 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; rhubarb, $1.50 to $2 per 100, demand fair to good; watercress, $1.50 to $2 per 100, demand poor; red and white radishes, $1 to $2 per 100, demand poor; scullions, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand good; horseradish, domestic, $2 to $2.50 per barrel; Western, $3 to $4 per barrel, demand fair; salad, $1 to $2.50 per 100 bunches, demand poor; asparagus, 12 to 20 cents per bunch, demand slow.

Green Fruit.

Apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3 per barrel; Spy, $3 to $4 per barrel; Russets, $2.50 to $3 per barrel, demand fair; pineapples, $1.25 to $2.50 per box, demand fair; grapefruit, $2.50 to $6 per box, demand good; lemons, $2.25 to $2.75 per box, demand poor; Florida oranges, $3 to $3.50 per box, scarce and good demand; California, $3.25 to $4 per box, demand good; bananas, jumbo, $2 to $2.50 per bunch; firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.35 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch; red, $1.50 to $3 per bunch, demand fair.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Coffee.

The falling off in the receipts at Rio and Santos, referred to by us, has become more accentuated since our last report, so much so that they are now running on a smaller scale than two years ago. We reiterate that we firmly believe the current crop will prove to be rather under than over 10,500,000 bags for both Rio and Santos.

As a rule, some new crop coffee reaches shipping ports during the month of June, and we include average receipts of new crop during that month, in making up our estimate. The next crop, however, appears to be late in ripening. Furthermore, rains which set in (in the coffee-growing districts in the State of Sao Paulo) about two weeks ago, and continued for some time, have retarded picking and drying, so that the Santos crop will very likely be later than usual, in which case the June receipts may be as much as 250,000 bags below the average receipts for that month.

The valorization people, who control the larger part of the existing visible supply in consuming markets, are well aware of the advantage which their position would gain through a delay in marketing the coming crop. They have recently put their shoulders to the wheel again to establish a higher level of price. In order to succeed in these efforts the purchase of only a moderate quantity of Rio coffees was required, and whilst Rio coffees are not generally wanted by the trade, the effect of relieving the market of the few lots that were pressing for sale was immediately felt and resulted in an advance of the price. The trade in Europe and the United States has shown considerable reluctance for some time past in taking up Rios, but there are signs of their gradually getting into favor again. The difference in price between Rio and Santos (now amounting to 1 to 1½ cents per pound) will eventually force those who want a cheap coffee to pay attention to Rios, despite the fact that their flavor in the cup is obnoxious to many consumers.

This so-called Rio flavor has been found to exist in a good many parcels of coffee shipped here from Santos this year, and we must say that it is less pronounced in old crop high-grade Rios, of which there is quite a fair stock in warehouses here. These latter coffees deserve attention for their intrinsic worth, and will fill the wants for a real good article at a moderate price.

Consumption of Brazil coffee keeps up to its record figures, having amounted to 11,300,000 bags during the ten months of July to April, inclusive, and promising to reach 13,500,000 bags during the crop year, as compared with 13,000,000 bags the previous year and 12,000,000 bags two years ago.

The existing world's visible supply of Brazil coffee was on the 1st inst. 13,560,000 bags, of which the Government owns 7,780,000 bags, leaving available for the trade 5,780,000 bags, of which 1,350,000 bags were then in Brazilian shipping ports.

The size of the 1908-09 Rio and Santos crop depends to some extent on the hulling outturn, i. e., on the weight of the bean per measure of cherries. We get reports regarding this outturn, as a rule, during the month of June.

Our advance information, however, is to the effect that the Santos crop will not exceed 9,000,000, nor that of Rio 3,000,000 bags.

The Sao Paulo Government's estimate of the Santos crop is 8,000,000 to 8,500,000 bags. The Rio planters' estimate of the Rio crop is 2,500,000 bags. But the interests these parties have at stake in circulating small crop ideas prevent us from accepting their estimates at face value.

Nevertheless, we are reasonably certain that the coming Brazil crop will be at least 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 bags smaller than the world requires for consumption.

As long as the crops are less than the world consumes, we can see no danger to the market, but should we have an excessive crop again, which may happen in a year or two, or even later than that, then it will be time to look out for breakers. On the other hand, the advance in the price is limited to that at which the Government is willing to supply the trade.

The arrivals of mild coffees in Europe and the United States since January 1st are somewhat in excess of those of recent years during the same period, despite reports from the best sources that these crops are ½ to ¾ million bags smaller than they were of late years. These larger arrivals cause us to doubt the correctness of the small crop estimates heretofore prevalent, although there are good reasons for the rapid marketing of these crops to be found in the fact that consuming markets were virtually bare of supplies and were therefore eager to buy new crop coffees as soon as they became available. We learn, in fact, from several small Central American States, that their total crop has already been shipped out. If this is correct, then the into-sight movement of these kinds will be unsually small during the next eight months.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

The first picking of the Bahama pineapples arrived last Monday and the quality is all that can be desired. For the next three or four weeks every pineapple canner will be at work full blast and the recent improvement in the demand is encouraging. Strawberries and peas will be sufficiently plentiful in the next week or so to commence canning, and there is a fair demand for them. The outlook for all crops of fruits, berries, cherries, peaches, excepting pears, and all early vegetables, is considered to be excellent. The unseasonable weather of the previous three weeks was followed this week by ideal weather for the growing crops. The peach crop will be the largest we have had in several years, and the jobbers are showing increased interest in them.

There was, by far, larger buying of both spot and future tomatoes this week than at any time since the first of the year, and the market shows unmistakable signs of increased activity from now on in both spot and futures. There are some good trades in them offered here and intending buyers would do well, we believe, to look them up now. Watch the corn market also, especially for future delivery. The present indications point toward some improvement in that article by-and-by. There was some good buying of it this week.

Outside of tomatoes and corn, the character of the buying has not changed, excepting that the small orders for assorted goods are gradually increasing in size, if not in number, and they cover nearly every article in the list. It is the usual spring buying, but on a very reduced scale.

Spices.

We can report an active market during the week and prices are firmer throughout the list. Stocks are unusually small.

Pepper.—Futures are much firmer. Spot sales are quite satisfactory at steady prices. It is estimated that the Lampong and Java crop is about 170,000 bags. This is somewhat more than the average total crops will be and there is no question but that the consumption of peppers will be increasing.

Cayennes rather quiet and unchanged in price.

Cloves are very steady and in good demand, which will increase over the next three months.

Pimento (Allspice) is firmer in price; demand good, and Europe has bought heavily. Prices are unquestionably firmer, with upward tendency.

Mace is unchanged in price. Good grades are scarce and firm.

Nutmegs.—Very active for spots as well as futures. Prices continue low and the present is strictly a buyer's market.

Cassias.—Saigon and China Bark are unchanged. Batavia is scarce and the tendency appears upward.

Gingers.—The demand is increasing and prices are safe.

Seeds.—Celery and Mustard are in demand for pickling. Prices throughout the list are unchanged. Caraway continues very firm.

MARKET NOTES.

Asparagus is mostly coming from New Jersey, and ranges from 10 to 20 cents per bunch. Fine Pennsylvania asparagus is coming along now, and ranges from 18 to 30 cents. The demand is active, though the receipts are heavy.

The first huckleberries are in from North Carolina and average 12 cents per quart. North Carolina huckleberries average 15 cents. The quality was only fair and the demand limited.

Florida is still shipping all the tomatoes on the market. The range is $2.75 to $3. The quality is good and so is the demand.

A few watermelons are coming forward from Florida and average $1 per melon. The fruit are of small size and the demand is good.

Peas of good quality are coming forward from the Eastern Shore of Maryland and range from $1 to $1.50. The demand is good.

Good string beans are scarce. The first North Carolina beans are coming in and bring $3.50 per crate. South Carolina beans are running poor and run from $1.25 to $1.50. Many of them don't bring over 75 cents to $1.

The first Florida corn is coming forward and averages $2 per case. The quality is poor and the demand light.

North Carolina cabbage ranges from $1 to $1.25 per crate and Norfolk $1.25 to $1.35 per barrel. The demand is fair.

Good new potatoes are scarce and command $4.50 per barrel. The receipts are mostly from Georgia and Charleston.

Commission men who have been watching the fruit situation predict now the biggest crop of peaches in the history of the State of Georgia. While the weather has hurt the fruit slightly in some sections, as in the valley lands of North Georgia, the damage has been comparatively small and large numbers of new trees have come into bearing this year to add to the crop. There is no reason to believe now that there will be any further danger from the weather, and with good conditions prevailing until the fruit ripens, commission men say that Georgia should easily ship 6,000 carloads, an amount of fruit which will be worth approximately $2,000,000. Last year the total shipments were but little over 1,000 carloads. If Georgia ships 6,000 carloads of peaches this year it will be a record breaking crop. The record heretofore is but little more than 5,000 cars. As a result of the heavy crop, commission men are predicting low-priced fruit this season. The best peaches, which sold at $2 to $2.50 a crate last year, will, it is expected, sell for $1.25 this year, and at times even lower than that.

Dried Fruit Controversy Still On.

Jobbers Still Refuse to Accept Dried Fruit Association's Contract, and the Association Shows No Disposition to Modify It.

There has up to this time been no settlement of the controversy between the Dried Fruit Association of California, comprising all the large dried fruit packers of the coast, and the wholesale grocers of the United States. The association still persists that jobbers who buy future dried fruit must sign the exceedingly drastic and one-sided contract which was recently adopted by the association and the text of which recently appeared in this journal. On the other hand, all but a very few jobbers have refused up to this time to do this, and the result has been extremely small sales of dried fruit futures up to this time. The Philadelphia Grocers' and Importers' Exchange has appointed a committee to hold the Philadelphia trade firm, and they have had considerable success up to this time. The New York jobbing trade, barring a few jobbers on the East Side who can never be depended on for anything, is solidly against the proposed contract.

Up to this time there has been practically no disposition to compromise on either side. The Dried Fruit Association refuses to modify its contract, and the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, representing the jobbers, has not suggested any agreement to take the place of the one rejected. The jobbers seem to be feeling rather comfortable over the situation, being content to let the packers carry the stocks instead of themselves.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—For a number of seasons we have been getting out a booklet similar to the inclosed, which is our latest number, and would like to have your opinion on same. Do you consider this a good scheme to land new trade? Our object in distributing these booklets is to get them in the hands of new trade, which we are able to do by keeping in touch with the real estate men and getting the names of parties who are about to, or thinking of, making Mt. Kisco their home, and then mailing this booklet to their out-of-town address.

We think this to be an original scheme and would like to know your candid opinion of same.

Your reply will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,
A. L. BANKS & SON.
Per V. G. B.

P. S.—We also mail each new issue to every customer we have, thinking this good policy.

The booklet inclosed with this had eight pages and cover, 4¾ x 6 inches. The printer had used good paper and the little book presented quite a good appearance. Here is the cover reproduced natural size:—

The matter which appears in the pamphlet is reproduced in full, not to show the style in which it appears in the book, but simply to reproduce its text. I have had one page photographed to show the style of printing:—

BECAUSE, we cannot in full and do justice to our patrons and ourselves. A constantly changing market prevents us from doing this; but we are always willing to quote prices on request. Customers are thus, at all times, assured of lowest market rates on all goods.

Remember in comparing prices, quality must be compared also.

We ask no favors. All we ask is comparison. We make no claims that we are unwilling to have settled by the test of results.

Anyone can make big claims, on paper: but you do not have to take our word for it, for the test of our claims is easy, sure and simple. On the basis of thorough comparison, we are pleased to have our goods placed alongside those of any other firm in the field.

QUOTING LOW PRICES ONLY, AS AN INDUCEMENT FOR TRADE, IS AN INSULT TO INTELLIGENT BUYERS.

Here is the matter verbatim:—

ABOUT MOUNT KISCO.

Less than thirty-seven miles from New York City, with a mean elevation of over 500 feet and surrounded by the highest peaks in Westchester County, it offers a variety of scenery seldom equaled. With the many beautiful drives, the clear streams, the rugged hills and fertile valleys, presenting a never changing panorama, finds one always in pleasant places.

Mount Kisco offers you all the comforts of the city, with electric lights, an enlarged water works system, five churches, a modern free library progressively managed, well-kept walks and drives and strictly up-to-date stores.

Washington tarried here to eat. People still eat well in Mount Kisco and enjoy their living by patronizing "THE LEADING FAMILY GROCERY."

"GUARD HILL," one of our highest mountains, receives its name, it is said, from Washington posting a company of soldiers there to guard against surprise by the British troops, and also to protect his historic retreat.

Like sentinels, the surrounding mountains watch over our charming village; and when the shadows lengthen, the sunlight may still be seen shining on their lofty summits. Likewise they give us warning of the approach of day.

BEAUTIFUL FOR SITUATION, the pride of Westchester County, and peopled by all that is desired.

MOUNT KISCO WELCOMES YOU TO SHARE WITH HER.

"THE NEWCOMER."

WE WOULD GAIN YOUR CONFIDENCE.

Twenty-five years of experience and our reputation for fair dealings, we feel, should count greatly in establishing the same.

With the broadest guarantee, "All goods as represented or your money refunded," we ask your patronage.

Our discount of 10 cents per dozen, of course, makes it to your advantage to purchase in quantities. This applies to straight goods of one-half dozen and over. (By straight goods, we mean an article of a single brand and variety.) We should greatly appreciate a trial order.

PERMANENT SUCCESS IS RARELY ACHIEVED BY ACCIDENT.

AFTER MANY SUCCESSFUL SEASONS, we approach you with confidence; confident that we have the goods and also that we can please you.

We solicit your patronage as the leading firm in the field; priding ourselves in offering to the public a line of goods that must meet with your approval.

Not by blowing horns or sounding trumpets are we gaining the attention of the intelligent buyer, but consistent prices and unequaled qualities, coupled with plain common sense in merchandising, is winning for us a standing for which we are proud.

TO OUR MANY FAITHFUL FRIENDS AND PATRONS WE EXTEND OUR THANKS

For your loyal support in the past, for the good words you have spoken of us, and also for all just criticism you have offered, all of which has greatly assisted us in perfecting our service.

This little booklet we present to you, trusting you may grant us the few moments required to read its pages. Herein we have tried to explain our reasons for being unlike other stores. * * *

This in my judgment is a very clever scheme. Take persons who are, as Banks & Son say in their letter, thinking of moving to Mt. Kisco. They have looked the place up and have gotten all the information concerning it that they can possibly get. As is the case with all persons whose faces are set toward a new home, their minds are peculiarly receptive to all information concerning it. When this little booklet reaches them they are pretty sure to read it, and to remember the firm who sent it. The only question that comes to my mind is whether the field is very large. I have no idea how many people move into Mt. Kisco in the course of a year, but if it is the average country town, there might not be more than the merest handful in a year. The point of this is that this is rather an expensive pamphlet to get printed up to send to half a dozen people a year. I don't think a great deal of sending it to people who already live in the town.

I believe that this plan can be carried out much more tastefully, however. In the first place I should never have had it set in italic. A solid page of italic is an exasperating thing to read. Here and there through the booklet little photographs of the town appear, and this is a very pretty feature. The typographical arrangement, however, could be much improved by the use of Roman, that is, non-italic type, and by putting a delicate border about each page. To give an idea, I have had page 1 reproduced, exactly as in the original, and then reset according to my own ideas:—

Following this general plan would have greatly improved the elegance of this booklet.

I think the matter in this booklet can also be improved. There is too much of it, and it reiterates too much. I should not mix the data regarding the town with the advertising for the store. There should be a few pages in the beginning devoted to exploiting the town, its historic interest, its beauties, and everything interesting about it that can be condensed into a small space. All the pictures of local features need not go in these pages, but can be scattered through the book. After I had finished with the town, I should print a page or two about the store. A page would probably be enough to well say all that has been drawn out into two or three times that in the book before me. The matter regarding the store is much too verbose. There should also be a photograph of the store, taken from the angle that will give it the best appearance.

How a Dozen Retailers Changed from Credit to Cash

Extracts from Active Experiences of Merchants Who have Put Their Business on a Cash Basis.

[The following summarized description of Methods of Retail Merchants who have changed their business from a credit to a cash business, have been collected by Butler Bros., who keep in close touch with the retail business.]

This may be called a change to a gradual cash basis. Following is an extract from a letter which a certain merchant mailed to his trade: "I propose to cater more to the cash trade than in the past. On all cash sales of $1 or more at one time I will pay in cash (10) ten per cent. rebate to the purchaser, excepting on sugar, flour, tobacco, nails, kerosene and barbed wire. No rebates on sums less than $1. It is not my intention to entirely suspend selling on credit, but it is my intention and wish to cut down the credit sales to a minimum. Cash means cash when the goods are delivered, and not to-morrow or any other day."

Following is a self-explanatory quotation from a letter used by a retailer in gradually changing to the cash basis: "As an evidence of our intention to secure more business, and as an extra inducement for all cash buyers to favor us with their patronage, we will agree to furnish each of our cash customers, absolutely free of charge, a complete set of handsomely decorated, hand-painted dishes. The set consists of cups and saucers, pie plates, dinner plates, sugar bowls, platters, bakers, pitchers, bread plates, etc. We attach to this letter a coupon representing purchases amounting to $1. Return this coupon to our store and we will give you a piece of chinaware and explain our plan in detail."

Here is part of an advertisement used by one merchant that suggests a good mode of procedure for any merchant ready to adopt the cash basis:—

THE CASH SYSTEM.

"On and after March 1st next our terms of business will be:—

"1. We sell for cash only.

"2. We will return the money if our goods are not satisfactory or as advertised.

"3. We will send goods to any amount on approval. Such goods to be returned to us or paid for within three days.

"4. We shall mark all our goods in plain figures with fixed prices from which there will be no reduction; these prices will be marked in red ink on the existing ticket so as to enable purchasers to see the amount reduced.

"These terms give every guarantee and protection to the honest buyer, and they insure us against undue loss. They are successfully applied in retail stores elsewhere, and we feel sure that when they are understood here they will be appreciated; and will still more closely unite us to the people of —— whose patronage we solicit and whose interests we have always endeavored to serve.

"We are most anxious to act in the fairest possible way to those of our retail customers who have taken goods at our old prices. We wish them to profit by the great reductions the cash system will enable us to make in all our prices. We, therefore, will reduce:—

"Ten per cent. from all outstanding accounts paid before 1st of April.

"Five per cent. from all outstanding accounts paid before 1st of May.

"Two and a half per cent. from all outstanding accounts paid before 1st of June.

"But if, notwithstanding our liberal terms, any accounts remain unpaid on the 1st of July they will be handed over to our lawyer for collection without further notice."

Here is some advice from a merchant who has made a success of the modified cash basis:—

I would advise using some good kind of coupon or pass books in about $2, $5, $10 and $20 sizes.

Occasionally you will be obliged to turn down a slow pay customer who will feel sore and go to your competitor until his bill gets so large that he is turned down there, then he will come back to you rather than pay up his bill across the street.

When you do issue a pass book for a note, simply record the amount in your sales book and in your indexed bills receivable book and file the note away in an indexed file; and that is all there is to it until the note is paid, when you merely check it off the bill book and give up the note. Never any trouble settling, no wrangling over accounts, and no long itemized statements to render.

Following is a form of a note that another retail merchant uses in connection with a change to the cash basis:—

____ days after date _____ promise to pay to the order of _____ _____ dollars.

Value Received.

Interest at ___ per cent. after maturity.

No. _____

One form of definite credit that is proving successful in a certain case is suggested by the following, which is about the answer the merchant returns to each request for credit:—

Very well, I will give you just what you ask for in the matter of credit, and will make the memorandum right here on the ledger page which will carry your account. But let us understand one thing clearly, right from the start. You are not to ask me for 5 cents more than the amount of credit I have given you, nor are you to ask me for an extension of time. Certainly you can't complain at my making this rule rigid, when I have given you at the beginning all that you have asked for. You have set your own stakes, and cannot reasonably resent it if you are asked to abide by them.

Here is the experience of an Illinois retail grocer told under date of January 1, 1906, and retold under date of April 3, 1908:—

I quit the credit business December 1, 1903, with $1,800 on my book. I collected $1,000 of it and had to pay 10 per cent. to have some of that collected. I started in a month ahead to notify all my credit customers, collect and shut off, had big signs printed and put up all over store and windows, also advertisements in all the county papers, so when December 1, 1903, came I had my cash store ready to start with a big cut rate sale.

Sold more goods for cash than I had ever sold for cash and credit combined. My first cash year in the same room, same line of goods, gained $6,000 over any cash and credit year, my second cash year, $1,200 over my first cash year.

Any good, pushing, price-making business man can sell more goods for cash than on the cash and credit plan, and he is not checked by the fear of the words, "charge it." I will also say that more goods are not charged than are lost on bad accounts.

A business man will drive more trade away from his store by saying, "Yes, I will credit you," than if he says "No"—on account of the disputes over accounts and by credit to some and not to others, and when people get in debt they go to some other store to trade, for fear they will be asked to pay what they owe.

In the two years I have been in the cash business I have had only twelve people ask me for credit, and four of them were newcomers.

I think the best time to start a cash store is right in the season, rather than after the season is over. And I would start with low prices and not premiums. Premiums are good afterwards when you want more profit.

This spring, when asked to tell how the plan had worked out, this merchant wrote: "I will say in regard to the cash system that I have not cause to regret adopting it. My letter of 1906 still covers the case."

Large Shipment of Flour Seized by Government.

Charge is Misbranding Under Food Law. Ohio Flour Said to Have Been Branded Minnesota. Confiscation Suit Begun Under Federal Food Law.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 22, 1908.

Another confiscation suit has been brought in the District of Columbia by the Department of Agriculture, this time against a shipment of flour claimed to be misbranded.

The shipment consisted of 1,440 sacks, and it was all consigned to dealers in the city of Washington. The charge in a nutshell is that the label falsely conveyed the impression that the flour was Minnesota flour. It is said to be an Ohio product.

Agricultural Department Inspector C. A. Mesene states he saw the consignment of flour ground and can testify that Ohio winter wheat was used.

Secretary Wilson's communication to the United States District Attorney, suggesting prosecution, sets forth that the Orville Milling Co., of Orville, Ohio, had sent to F. G. Swain & Son, of this city, 240 bags of flour labeled "Paragon, Minnesota Cream Roller Process. Sales agent, F. G. Swain & Son, Washington, D. C." Also that 1,200 sacks of flour had been sent to the Sanitary Grocery Co. of this city labeled "Cereta High Grade Patent Flour, Sanitary Grocery Co., Washington, D. C." Both shipments, according to the inspector, were made in the same mill in Ohio and of the same kind of wheat.

Cut Down Your Ice Bill

When you buy a McCray Refrigerator you use less ice—and it actually pays for itself. Many grocers have figured it up in dollars and cents, and have found that their McCray Refrigerators cost them nothing—they saved the money on the ice bill and made more money on account of the perfect condition in which their goods were kept.

McCray

have the best system of circulation. They keep everything sweet, free from taint, and absolutely dry. A McCray Refrigerator in your store will attract attention because of its elegant finish, and it will actually sell more goods for you because they will be kept in better condition, and be more tempting to your customers. McCray Refrigerators are made in all sizes for immediate shipment, or built to order, and every refrigerator is absolutely guaranteed.

Write your name and address on a postal—ask for catalog No. 65 for grocers, or No. 58 for meat markets. Don't delay a minute. Do this now before you forget. Every moment's delay means the loss of real money and trade to you.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Tapioca.

Tapioca, or white sago, as it is sometimes called, is a farinaceous substance derived from the large knotty roots or tubers of two species of South American manioc plants, the bitter cassava and the sweet cassava, known respectively as Manihot utilissima and Manihot aipi, both of the Euphorbimu tribe, which perhaps includes the most venomous botanical growths in nature.

Tapioca is raised chiefly in Brazil, but also extensively in the eastern Straits Settlements, in Penang, Singapore, and in the Mascarine Islands.

The roots resemble large parsnips, and grow to perfection within six months. When washed, peeled of their dark rinds, they are grated into a pulp, which is subjected to pressure in a screw press under water and in a kind of bag made of rushes. The crude juice which is forced out contains a poisonous amount of prussic acid, and this is commonly employed by the Indians to poison the barbs of their murderous arrows and spears. When all the juice or starchy matter has settled to the bottom of the water, it is removed, roasted and stirred well with an iron rod, and finally dried on hot plates, where it separates into a sort of white powder, called tapioca flour, or Brazilian arrowroot, and by the French moussaché. It consists of small irregular transparent granules, some of which burst and agglomerate into lumps.

The fecula or Pearls thus formed are afterwards sifted into several grades of sizes known as small, medium, bullet and flake tapioca. The pulpy mass left in the rush bag, being dried, is called Conaque. This is made into Manioc flour or Cassava bread. Pearl or Bullet tapioca is often imitated or adulterated with pellets made of potato starch. Tapioca itself consists largely of starch; it is not very nutritious; but potato starch is a much cheaper and inferior article.

Tapioca is used in the same way as sago, but requires to be previously steeped for some hours, or to be simmered for a long time. For soups and broth the small crushed tapioca is much better suited than either the bullet, pearl or flake varieties, and should only be added a short time before serving, so as not to spoil its transparency.

Thyme.

A dwarf herb of the mint family. One kind is botanically indicated as Thymus vulgaris, and grows wild as a bushy undershrub from six to ten inches high, with very small ovate leaves, which have an agreeable, strong and penetrating odor; but the kind cultivated in gardens is a native of the South of Europe. It loves rich sandy soil in the sun, and is more delicate in perfume than the other. The leaves should be gathered for drying at end of July or in August. It is used, both green and dried, as a warm, pungent, aromatic seasoning for soups, stews, stuffings, sauces and other culinary preparations.

Thyme was formerly burnt as incense by the Greeks. It was also used in cooking by the Romans, and in preparing their aromatic liquors.

Process Butter and Other Questions.

Troy, N. Y., May 18, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We desire to ask a question or two, believing that your advice will be valuable and conclusive.

There is considerable unrest among the trade here in regard to the enforcement of the law covering process butter. We understand that certain grocers have been held up and fined for not stamping cut packages of process butter.

We would like to know just what the law was on the subject.

Does it compel the stamping of each cut of butter, or is the stamp on the original package and a sign sufficient?

What is your opinion as to the utility and expediency of the new mechanical systems of bookkeeping, of which the McCaskey is a type?

It seems to us that, while possessing many valuable features, that of always presenting a posted up account being especially good, its saving in time and bookkeeping is more apparent than real, the time being used a minute or so at a time a hundred times a day. Then it violates the modern law of specialization, making each clerk his own bookkeeper, which must be at a sacrifice of efficiency and take longer.

On the order routes the system seems totally unsuited; it destroys the cohesion and connection between the orders gotten on each trip and breaks them up into individual accounts. When a lot of orders is put on the register it is almost as much out of our reach, as a whole, for inspection and correction, as though it were in Panama.

As to the alleged impossibility of mistake, it seems to us that if an error occurs against the customer she will be sure to bring back bill for correction, but if the error is in her favor there is no such surety.

When account is paid charge slip is destroyed. There should be some record that it is paid. It would be the easiest thing in the world for anyone having access to register to remove charge slip and destroy it, and the whole system appears to lie in every one in the establishment using the register.

Yours truly,
Bowman & Rowley.

Under the law and the regulations it is not enough for a retail grocer to stamp an original package of process butter and to post signs that he sells process butter. He must inform each consumer to whom he sells it that it is process butter, and this must be done by stamping each individual package.

The "Grocery World's" opinion of short bookkeeping systems, such as the one named, and many others, is that they have many labor-saving features, and, generally speaking and within limits, are good. The "Grocery World's" custom, however, is to turn over such practical questions to its subscribers for answer. The opinions of men who have used such appliances is sure to be better than the most logical theory. So that we pass this question along to the readers of this paper—what do they think of these systems of bookkeeping? We shall be extremely grateful, and so will Bowman & Rowley, if some opinions on the subject can be sent in for publication.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXXIX.—Customers' Foods.

Show interest in the customer's fad and cultivate a better customer.

It seems that fads are almost as numerous as people, but at the same time those who make the effort can keep enough knowledge on hand to talk interestingly for a few moments on most of them, and there is no surer way to keep your faddy customer interested in your store than to be able to say a few interesting things about his particular fad to show your interest in him.

Every man has his weak points, and they are generally his fads. Touch him there and you have his best thoughts; get your store associated in his mind with the thoughts he likes best and he is mighty likely to be a good customer.

About all that is necessary for the merchant to do to acquire knowledge along the fad line is to be able to show that he is interested. If he can keep from looking bored he will generally get enough information each time the faddist comes in to make his next visit a pleasant one and cause him to go away feeling that he is keenly interested in him.

You can even encourage your customers to become faddy about the brands of goods you handle, so nothing else will exactly please them, for a customer who has one fad is more than likely to take up another, as the disease spreads through the system quite rapidly.

Fads must not be ignored by the merchant, for they can be made too profitable to him, and the man who can be really interested in all of them, and not catch any of them himself, will find it easy to build up his business.

Middletown, N. Y., May 7, 1908.

Mr. A. W. Johnson, New Brunswick, N. J.:

I have used one of your Eversharp dried beef slicing machines in my store for about eight months, cutting thousands of pounds of the finest beef sold in our city, and I wish to add a testimonial in behalf of the machine It has never caused me one bit of trouble by being out of order or by having a dull blade. It is very simple to keep sharp and slices the beef in perfect shape, piling nice, thin slices up like so many sheets of paper. My customers remark to one another "I get the nicest shaved beef here of any place in the city." We can use up the ends very close, therefore saving quite a loss which we always had with other machines. The Eversharp is a perfect machine. Would not trade it for any other machine we have ever witnessed, even though they cost two or three times as much. It is a satisfaction to be able to sell moist beef shaved in tissue slices.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Dessert Window.

First take a package of Jellycon. make the dessert according to directions, and take six Jellycon molds and make six molds of jelly according to directions. Then get a large round flat glass dish, wash thoroughly and set molds on same. Cover the floor of your window with white crepe paper and if possible have a white background. Set your dish containing the jelly in the centre of the window and on one side make a pile of each kind of dessert, already flavored, such as Jellycon, Tryphosa, Jello, Bromangelon, etc. On the other side put a can each of strawberries, blackberries, peaches, apricots, cherries, pears and any other canned fruit. On top of each can put a package of unflavored gelatine, such as Cox's, Nelson's, Knox's, etc. On the side containing the flavored gelatine hang the following sign:—

The Quick Kind
Easy to Make and Made in a Short Time
Bromangelon — Tryphosa
Jellycon — Jello
All Flavors — 10c. a Box

And on the other side:—

The Best Kind
Is the Kind You Flavor Yourself with

Strawberries,	—c. Can
Peaches,	—c. Can
Pears,	—c. Can
Plums,	—c. Can

Oranges, —, —, and	—c. Dozen
Lemons,	—c. Dozen
Limes,	—c. Dozen
Extract of Vanilla,	—c. Bottle
Extract of Almond,	—c. Bottle

In the centre of the semi-circle, formed by the canned fruits, distribute limes, lemons and oranges, and at one end of the semi-circle put a couple bottles of extract of almond and at the other end a couple bottles extract of vanilla. On top of the fruit lay a half-pound cake of bitter chocolate and a couple of cakes of sweet.

The sign headed "The Quick Kind" should be suspended just above on one side and "The Best Kind" above on the other side. The following sign should be suspended above the centre:—

Unflavored Desserts

Knox's,	—c. Package
Cox's,	—c. Package
Nelson's,	—c. Package

For Chocolate Flavor

Baker's Bitter,	20c. Cake
Wilbur's Sweet Clover,	5c. Cake
Lowney's Sweet,	5c. Cake

The desserts made in the molds should be frozen and then put in the window. If desired, something may be added to preserve their shape in hot weather. The results prove that this display sells quite an amount of canned fruits in addition to gelatine, especially in hot weather.

"Just In."

Follow these suggestions in decorating your window and you will be surprised to see what a great attraction it is.

Cover the floor of your window with clean paper.

Place a brand new wheelbarrow in the window, or if a new one cannot be had, clean up an old one and place it in the rear of the window(half upset), so that it rests on the rim and hub of wheel and one leg.

Place apples, oranges, pineapples or any other fruit you wish to make the subject of your display on and in front of wheelbarrow out to the glass, as though they were dumped from the wheelbarrow.

Allow the fruit to spread about three feet along the glass, and on both sides of the fruit place baskets of various other fruit and vegetables you may wish to advertise, placing them as close as possible, and not more than two inches from the glass, with a price tag in each basket corresponding to the fruit or vegetables you have in them. Hang above the baskets, at the top of the glass, a sign about eighteen inches wide and thirty-six inches long, or in proportion to the size of your window, on which have printed in large letters these words:—

Just In

Then watch the people crowding around your window to see the fresh seasonable fruit and vegetables, and if they are outside your window it requires only the magnetism of a neat, clean and up-to-date stock to draw them in and cause them to buy.

JOTS FROM A JOBBER'S NOTEBOOK.

It is going to be interesting to note whether the unusually high prices of fruit jars this year will have any effect on the consumption. It is the general opinion that this year's fruit crops are going to be large and this would naturally mean a heavy demand for jars. They are so much higher this year than last, however, that the retailer who charged 50 cents per dozen quarts last year will probably feel that he has to get 70 cents this year. Up to the present time very few jars have been sold. This is partly because a large number of jobbers carried a supply over from last year, and partly because this year's prices are too high to make jars attractive. In order to boom business the combination that controls Mason jars has issued notice during the week that all jobbers holding unsold jars next November will, if the opening 1909 prices are any lower than the jobber paid, receive a rebate on his unsold stock equal to the difference between the price paid and the 1909 opening. This was done to remove the uncertainty as to buying jars at present high prices, with the coming demand in doubt.

I heard an interesting discussion during the week touching one phase of the ethics of business. A certain jobbing house has for years sold a given brand of Maine corn, with other brands. One of its retail customers insisted upon having this particular brand, and for years placed a good-sized order for that every spring. Not long ago the broker who has sold this corn to the jobbing house in question got into a controversy with them, and the jobber announced that he would not buy the usual order to ship to the retail customer referred to, but would switch him, if he could, to the brand of another packer. The question which arose was this: Was the retailer the jobber's customer or the packer's? Had the packer the right to consider the jobber's attitude an attack upon his (the packer's) business, and for that reason to sell the retailer direct? Or was it purely the jobber's own business? In other words, was the customer his and did he have the moral right to change him from one brand to another without regard to whether the packer was hurt or not? My own opinion is that inasmuch as the retailer had been led to stick to that brand of corn year after year, not because of anything the jobber had done, but purely because of the quality of the goods, the packer had a right to consider him his customer and to hold him even if he had to sell him direct.

THE JOBBER.

The first few peaches are coming north both from Florida and Georgia. The Georgia fruit averages $4 and the Floridas $5. The quality is good for the first fruit and the demand fair.

Does he sell any? You can just bet he sells some—sells a lot.

And a lot of other high-grade stuff like that.

He don't do such a hefty business—I should suppose maybe $300 or $400 a week, but he makes good money out of it. He's got a mighty fine little store—I've envied him it a good many times.

This grocer is married to one of the most blooming little females I ever saw. Gee, but she is a peach! Not much educated, but a good looker from the word go. One of these soft, plump kind, with eighteen-karat curves.

This woman is destroying her husband as fast as she can. Not that she means to—good Lord, no! She's an affectionate little thing and she loves the very ground he walks on. And he's the same with her. If she could be made to understand that what she's doing is as serious as it is, I believe she'd cut herself down. But may be she wouldn't either—she's a good deal like a butterfly.

I have no idea what her husband's income is, but from the sort of stuff he sells, and the profit I know there is in it, I'll bet he clears $3,000 a year out of that little business.

No need for a man to go beyond an income like that, is there?

But she's pushing him beyond it—way beyond it. She's the most recklessly extravagant woman about some things I ever heard of. Not so much on clothes, though she goes some there too. Mostly on fitting up her house. I've never been in it, but those that have tell me it's fitted up like a millionaire's. That wouldn't be so bad, but she's all the time throwing out perfectly good things and getting new.

She'll buy a new carpet for the parlor. It'll make everything look so shabby—she thinks—that everything else has to be got new, too.

People tell me buying stuff for the house is a perfect mania with the woman.

Her hifalutin ideas have already got her husband into two or three little financial holes where he had to borrow money. Once he went to a shark loan company and paid about 100 per cent. interest. That's pretty dangerous business, if I know anything about it.

He's up against it all the time. His credit isn't half as good as it was five years ago.

Understand, there's no scrapping between the grocer and his wife about money. She simply can't help spending, and he simply can't help letting her. She's a mighty lovable little woman, and he can't refuse her anything.

I understand he tried to shut down two or three times, but each time she put her arms around his neck and pretty soon it was all over.

I can understand how it is. I don't say it disrespectfully of her, but if that little lady were to put her arms around my neck I believe I'd agree to anything.

I don't know this grocer very well personally, but I know a good deal about him in a business way, and I'd give a lot to help him. For really, he's in a bad way, boys. Why, that wife of his, loving him all the time and with the warmest little heart in the world, is going to bust him up! You mark my words, she'll do it!

I don't know how to help him. I don't know how anybody can help him. When I heard his story I felt as if I'd give a dollar to drop in on him and just show him where he stood. Of course he knows, but it's probably never been rubbed in.

But if I did, he'd kick me out, and he'd have a perfect right to. I've been complimented quite some on my cheek, but it's going a little too much even for me to tell a man his own wife, that he loves dearly, is ruining him.

My commission would come in in just such cases as this. I'd make a complaint, and they'd hold an investigation. If they found that the complaint was true, they'd call that dear little woman before 'em and lay down some law.

It would help a lot. It's a pretty tough thing when you have to stand by and see a good man squeezed to death, even by his own wife. Pretty tough, indeed!

If I'd only had a commission like that to take up my own case, I wouldn't be working to-day.

MY DEAR "STROLLER."—I have read your articles for a number of years and once in a while you strike a responsive chord, or else I feel like saying something back. In fact, I enjoy it immensely when some one else does make a reply. A few weeks ago you gave us a couple of temperance talks, and that always interests me, because I know that some people read the "Grocery World" who will not listen to a minister.

Now I am sending to you a sermon, which has recently been published, and was preached by a very highly esteemed minister near here, which, I think, is very good summing up the great saloon problem. Kindly read it when you have the opportunity.

This letter, of course, is not for publication, and I will not expect a reply, but if you ever happen to be going through this town in your big automobile, just kindly have your chaffeur stop for a moment while we say "Good morning."

Respectfully yours,

A.

I got the sermon and have read it, too. It's fine, strong stuff—I agree with every word.

THE STROLLER.

Florida cantaloupes are now coming forward and range from $2 to $3.50 per basket. The quality is only fair and the demand slow.

Question: * * *, N. J.—Will you kindly give your opinion of this case: In November, 1906, I bought a piece of property with the understanding that same was free and clear from all encumbrances. After I paid a deposit and received a receipt the agent asked for the receipt for a moment and wrote on it, "subject to payment of 1906 taxes," the receipt being copied in the book, with the exception of the tax item, which was added to receipt after same came from copy book.

After giving the matter some thought I refused to pay the taxes for 1906, claiming that this would not leave the property free and clear as agreed in the beginning. I agreed to give the owner the December rent and have him pay the taxes, as he then had the income for the entire year. This he did, but charged me interest from November 24, 1906, till January 1st, which amounted to $15.17.

As my interest in the property only began on January 1, 1907, I believe I should be returned the interest paid from November 24th till that date. Can I legally recover the amount in question? The owner has since died and the estate has been settled.

I have never received a deed for the property and when I asked for it they claimed that it was mailed to me. I could get no further satisfaction, only they had a real estate agent write up a deed, which I understand has no value. Can I force them to give me the original deed or certified copy of same? I am willing to take an affidavit that the deed was never delivered to me. Thanking you in advance for your advice.

Answer.—This looks as if you had been imposed upon. In the beginning, if the owners of the property contracted to sell it to you free of all encumbrances, you could have compelled them to do so, and could not have been compelled to accept the property subject to any unpaid taxes, which are a lien. Having compromised on the basis of allowing the owner the December rent in consideration of his paying the 1906 taxes (which he should have done anyway) there was no decent reason for charging you interest, for the reason that your ownership of the property actually did not begin until January 1, 1907. In my judgment the sum paid as interest can be recovered by an action begun against the owner's estate.

As for the deed, the executors or administrators of the estate can be compelled by a bill in equity to furnish you a proper deed for the property, and my advice is to proceed against them for that purpose just as soon as possible. It is risky to have a property standing on the records in the name of some one else.

Perfection in Canning Vegetables Accomplished at Last.

There is no business so little understood nor so misrepresented as the canning business. The object of this article is to give grocers a more intelligent idea of the business (because it is something they should know).

The canner, as a rule, is a man of intelligence and ability; he goes into the business to make money and he realizes that he cannot do this by selling the trade once. He knows that he could only sell the trade once if consumers didn't ask for his goods a second time. This means if he is to expect the trade to prefer his goods, he must make the quality to induce the trades' customers to prefer them.

For many years the processes of canning have been identical in most factories. With corn, for example, it has always been considered necessary, in order to destroy the living organism, to cook it at least sixty-five minutes, at a temperature of 250 degress. The reason green vegetables decay so quickly is because of these living organisms. You will probably be surprised to know that canned vegetables when properly prepared are much more wholesome than fresh, because all the decay-producing bacteria have been eliminated.

To return again to the canning of corn. To subject it to 250 degress of heat for sixty-five minutes naturally liberates a certain amount of sulphur, which is natural to corn, and this causes discoloration in the canned product, giving it a slightly brownish tinge. This discoloration doesn't impair its food value, although if cooked too long or at too high a temperature, or if the cooking isn't uniform, the product may lose its flavor or have a scorched taste.

To overcome this it became customary for canners to use sulphite of soda to restore the natural color, but the pure food laws stopped this and you now get corn of a variety of shades, unless it has been prepared by that marvelous twentieth century invention, the Automatic Cooker, which gave the first hint of a revolution in the canning industry in the plant of the Iroquois Canning Co., at Onarga, Ill.

Before describing the new process, a word about the old method. After the goods are put in the cans and sealed, they are sterilized in retorts at temperatures ranging from 242 to 250 degrees Fahrenheit, for periods of from sixty to seventy-five minutes. As the cans occupy the same position while undergoing the process of sterilization, it is easy to understand that the corn near the tin will be cooked quicker than that in the centre of the can. When the corn in the centre of the can is done, that near the tin is over-done, that is the reason no packer has ever been able to open from his pack twenty-four cases of corn from any one of his retorts and the contents of all the cans show alike. Another reason for this is the imperfect circulation of steam in the retorts.

Now for the Automatic Cooker.

For the past twenty years or more, canners have been trying to perfect the retort by devices for the better circulation of steam within it, and the attention of packers everywhere has been directed to methods for improvement in this direction. The new automatic process is the only thing that has been devised that meets the requirements perfectly. This new system carries the cans automatically by rolling and stirring through a boiler 100 feet long, from which they are discharged onto an apron which carries them in the same way through a cooling tank 120 feet long, and up into the boxing machines, from which the cans are carried to the warehouses automatically, every can being subjected to identically the same conditions, the corn within the cans being constantly moved from the circumference, changing the position in the can continually, until the goods are delivered into the boxes and carted away to the storehouses.

In this way the goods are cooked exactly the proper length of time at the proper temperature, and every particle of corn within the can is cooked exactly like every other particle, and every can that passes through the cooker receives identically the same treatment. With this new process, if the class of corn in the cans is the same and the consistency of every can the same, the goods will show an absolute uniformity through the entire pack.

We not only pack corn by this new process, but everything we turn out of our factory passes through the same treatment. This means goods that it is impossible to duplicate by the old process.

No. 363.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Store 17 x 38 feet. Does $17,000 to $18,000, two thirds cash. Stock $500. Net profits 10 per cent. Good 10-room dwelling connected for sale. Uses one team. Owner has seashore hotel and wants to give it his whole time. Take $2,500 on the property and inventory for stock and fixtures. Established 10 years ago and a very successful business.

No. 365.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 30 feet. Does $350 to $400 weekly, three-quarter cash, balance weekly. Nets clean 10 per cent. above everything. Stock about $900. This store was established seven years ago and is thoroughly prosperous and profitable. The present owner bought it four months ago. He wanted a certain ice cream store which the owner refused to sell and he then bought this store. The ice cream store is now for sale, and as the owner of the grocery prefers that business he wants it if he can get it. Will sell at inventory. Will take all told about $1,600. Fullest investigation.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

ONE OF THE BEST STORES IN WEST PHILADELPHIA.

Our No. 340 is one of the cleanest, finest, most profitable stores we have ever offered. In high class part of West Philadelphia. Size, 24 x 60. Does $45,000 yearly, three-quarters cash. Carries a stock of $2,500 and uses two teams. Clear net profits, 10 per cent., as the books will show. Ill health compels owner to sell and will sell at inventory, or lump sum of $3,800. Fixtures worth $1,200 to $1,500. This store has been established 21 years and is a sterling proposition.

SPLENDID CHANCE IN LEBANON COUNTY, PA.

We offer strong grocery in manufacturing town in Lebanon County, Pa., 81 miles from Philadelphia. Store 25 x 50, and does $30,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Located in heart of city. Stock $3,000 to $3,500. Uses two teams. Good dwelling attached. Present owner took $3,000 clear money out of this business last year outside of living expenses. He now wishes to retire and will sell at inventory. We have never handled a more solid proposition.

Getting What You Bought

Do you want to enjoy the novelty this year of knowing when you buy canned goods futures exactly how many you are going to get?

Chance is you never have had that certainty before.

To have it now order Blue Bell and Clover Farm canned goods of your jobber's salesman.

Very likely he handles them already; if he does not he can. Every jobber gets from us on these goods a contract to deliver 100 per cent. He will give it to you when you buy.

The finest canned goods packed in Maryland.

STRASBAUGH, SILVER & CO.
ABERDEEN, MD.

Backwards and Forwards

You grocers know the ups and downs of the breakfast food business. You know how dozens and dozens of products have come on the market, filled your shelves and stayed there. Could we possibly point to a more convincing argument in favor of the quality of Egg-O-See and E-C Corn than the fact that the sales of both are constantly growing.

Egg-O-See Cereal Company

QUINCY CHICAGO BUFFALO

THE FINEST MATCH MADE

The ideal modern match is the Ohio Blue-Tip Safety Match. While you can strike it on anything, it is a Safety Match because you can strike only the tip.

Far better than other double-tip matches, because it never gets soft, never flares up spontaneously, never drops or flies around.

The finest match made by all odds.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

When the Children Come

Lay a path for children to your door and trade will come as straight as the needle to the pole.

That's one great thing about our plane of advertising Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour—they advertise these superfine products to everybody, but particularly to the little folks.

Any of these:

Ralston Children's Checkers and Board
Ralston Children's Wagons
Ralston Checkerboard Satchels
Checkerboard Window Display

When you advertise Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour you've got something to advertise—the most perfect cereal foods of their class, whose purity from the very beginning has been absolute and unimpeachable.

Do You Take Any Interest in Selling Bulk Sugar?

You'll be surprised what an interest you'll take in selling sugar if you'll sell Franklin Carton Sugar instead of bulk sugar.

It's a heap more interesting product. To be sure, we sell bulk sugar, but conditions with which we've had no connection have fixed it so that the retail profit on it is very small.

As a remedy for that we offer Franklin Carton Sugar. The profit on that is not small, and the ease of selling it, as compared with bulk sugar, will reduce the hard labor of your business to an extent you can't possibly realize until you've experienced it.

The truth is you can make money selling Franklin Carton Sugar.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

PEANUTS—FIVE A BAG

Everywhere you go you hear that cry. Don't you think you should have some of the trade that the peddler has? If you knew that with an you could clear 300 per cent., would you not put one in when you learn that any boy can run it, and that there's nothing to get out of order, and that it will pay for itself in one month's time? We think you will, and we will be pleased to furnish further particulars and prices on request.

The GREAT Ramly

Is the one spelled R-A-M-L-Y, the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. So good, other cigarettes are made to look like it, so they will sell on the Ramly's reputation.

If you want to give your customers an ideal smoke, sell them the Ramly. You won't have to tell them about it the second time—they'll ask for it.

LOWNEY'S COCOA has maintained its high quality unimpaired regardless of the rise in the price of cocoa beans. For years now it has appealed to the best trade on its merits and become A STAPLE ARTICLE with a sure demand, constant and growing. Wide advertising in street cars, newspapers and magazines will go on pushing, pushing, pushing. It is a safe investment, and PAYS A FAIR PROFIT.

LOWNEY'S PREMIUM CHOCOLATE for cooking is of the same superfine quality.

Isn't It Foolish To Advertise Light?

It seems ridiculous to advertise light, so obvious is it that that which is lightest is cheerfulest and draws the most people.

Particularly a store. Every successful grocer in business uses an amount of light that you might consider extravagant; but it isn't—it is business. These grocers make their stores cheerful because they know that cheeriness brings people, and people buy.

You'll find that the most successful stores are always the ones that are the brightest at night.

Talk this over with us.

The Philadelphia Electric Co.
10th and Chestnut Sts., Phila., Pa.

THE ONLY WAY WE HAD A CHANCE

We have been endeavoring, through trade paper advertising, to induce you to ask for Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch. Many of you have done so, and are selling them regularly to-day.

We hazard the opinion that every grocer who is, is well satisfied that they are the cleanest and the best starches on the market.

They have to be the best, for that is absolutely the only ground on which they could sell. With the market dominated by one concern, what chance would an independent starch have unless it was better than its competitors?

So that there are two reasons why you ought to sell these starches. First—they are independent, Second—they are the best.

Fine Fix-tures Make Fine Sales

Almost every grocer sells loose pickles or loose olives. Usually they're kept in a keg somewhere.

Doesn't it stand to reason that a fine fixture displaying such things where they could say a word for themselves would make sales better.

Take our inexpensive 5-jar fixture, oak or cherry, and with nickel trimmings. Very handsome, very ornamental, very capable in influencing the sale of goods.

Fine fixtures make fine sales.

Look At It and Taste It

The minute you see Nicelle Olive Oil you feel sure it's a high-grade article. The package is unique and exclusive—you can't associate poor goods with it.

Taste Nicelle Oil and you know it's high grade. Nowhere else have you met that rich smoothness, that delicate yet penetrating olive flavor.

Women have told us repeatedly that their salad dressing came quicker and better with Nicelle Oil than with any other brand they ever tried.

Give it a chance for your own good.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

No Loss on Loose Goods

¶ Don't have goods loose and let dirt, bugs and hungry customers eat up half your profits. A store like this saves time hunting for goods that ought to be in sight at all times, pleases customers and disappoints the poor little bugs. Our catalogue shows other stores we have fitted up. Send for it.

On the Streets —at— Night

You occasionally get on the street at night, and every now and again you stop before the brilliant windows of the department stores.

What makes them brilliant? The goods displayed? It is the abundant light, under which almost any goods would make a brilliant window. You wouldn't be half so well interested in the window if it wasn't so bright with light.

Apply this logic to your own store. Is it so bright with light that it interests people in the streets at night?

If it isn't we can make it so, very inexpensively.

Seasonable Specialties

(OUR OWN CREATIONS)

Government Inspection Establishment No. 257

Prepared with the greatest care by clean methods in the Finest, Cleanest and most Sanitary Abattoirs and Sausage Kitchens in the country and are especially adapted for use during the coming Summer season.

Meat Loaf

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked in loaves of about eight pounds. Delicious. Can be served cold, sliced thin, or warmed up in oven to take the place of a roast.

Lunch Roll (Copyrighted.)

Choice, tender pieces of pork, very mildly cured; stuffed in linen sack or container. Boiled and ready to use in place of boiled ham. Makes an elegant dish when fried in place of ham or bacon.

Cervelat (also known as Summer Sausage or Winter Bologna.)

Not to be confounded with Lebanon Bologna or similar cheap products. Very choice and different from the numerous brands on the market from the fact that it contains no cereals. In beef casings—also a limited supply in hog casings.

Burk's Hams

Different from others in cut and trim, having short shanks and round butts. No salty taste—being new and sugar cured. Bright color, smoked with hickory wood.

Butternut Bacon

In strips, neatly wrapped in parchment paper. Strung with white cord and cut perfectly square, making every ounce available to the consumer. No waste. Not especially lean, being selected from best corn fed hogs, which imparts that tender, nutty flavor.

As Staple As Sugar

GOOD soap powder is as staple as sugar. If you sell a good brand it is certain to sell in sufficient quantity to make itself profitable.

Soap powder would sell even better if some manufacturers hadn't used a lot of harsh alkalies that ate off the skin.

Snow Boy Washing Powder is little more than the purest soap, powdered for greater convenience, and rounded out with some other innocent and effective ingredients. It is a safe and splendid cleanser.

And the premiums your customers get with it are just as good.

"No, They Don't Prefer It"

¶ A watcher of the sugar business said the other day:—"Can it be possible that any grocer prefers to sell bulk sugar when he can sell it in Franklin Cartons? Why I should think you'd get every grocer simply by showing the two propositions side by side!"

¶ It does seem reasonable, doesn't it, and yet we haven't succeeded—yet—in getting all grocers to handle Franklin Carton Sugar. No, we don't think they prefer to sell bulk sugar, but they've made no money on sugar for so long that a proposition to make it profitable is staggering and needs time for thought.

¶ They'll come to it some time, when the burden of the unnecessary work and the profit lost through overweight gets too heavy.

The Reason We Sell More

¶ Lots of manufacturers claim that they can force you to sell their goods by creating a demand with the consumer. We know that "unwilling service is never good service"; so instead of trying to force you to sell Mother's Oats we are making it worth your while to push them, by giving you an extra profit in the shape of the coupons which net you a profit of ½ cent each on all redeemed. When you induce your customers to take Mother's Oats instead of some other brand you have the satisfaction of knowing that you have tied them to you by giving them an oat product which is better than anything else of the kind on the market.

Both Rolled Oats Concerns Losing by Price Conflict

Great Western Cereal Co.'s Attitude has Grocer With It but Consumer Against, while Quaker Oats People have the Consumer but Not the Grocer. Where the Position of Each is Uncomfortable and Dangerous. Some Talk of Combination.

The conflict between the Great Western Cereal Co. and the Quaker Oats Co. over the propriety of fixing a retail price, and as to what that price should be, is waxing bitterer every day. Of course it is not a conflict directly between these two companies, as each of them is operating upon the retail trade. Nevertheless, a fight with the two as antagonists is exactly what the controversy actually amounts to.

The principles upheld by the two concerns have been elucidated in this journal before. In a nutshell, the Great Western Cereal Co. contends that no manufacturer should fix the retail price of his product, but should leave the retail dealer to get whatever price he can. The Great Western Co., however, is using every effort to induce grocers to get 12 cents or more for Mother's Oats.

The Quaker Oats Co., on the contrary, believes that it has the right to fix the retail price, and it has fixed it at 10 cents, 2 cents below the "suggestive" price of its competitor. In various ways the Quaker Oats Co. is advertising a 10-cent price to consumers. Admittedly this prevents grocers from getting any more.

Both the two big rolled oats concerns are losing something by this conflict, and it is difficult to see how they can fail to keep on losing. At the present time many a retail store handles both Mother's and Quaker Oats, the packages being identical in size and the quality of the oats being the same in each. Mother's Oats costs the grocer $3.50 per case and retails at 12 cents, Quaker Oats costs him $3 per case and retails at 10 cents. The result is that the grocer who sells both brands is apt to be put in a deadlock with his customer. Naturally he wishes to sell the 12-cent package, for it nets him a better profit. The customer, on the other hand, sees no reason why she should pay the extra 2 cents, and to be frank, there is no reason, and the grocer can give none, since Quaker Oats and Mother's both represent the highest grade of raw materials.

The Great Western Cereal Co. has therefore placed itself in a position where it has the grocer's loyalty and where it will get all the help he can give it, in the sale of Mother's Oats. In many cases the grocer can sell Mother's Oats at 12 cents, and will do so, in spite of the competition of Quaker Oats at 10. But in many other cases the best grocer in the world cannot induce consumers to pay 12 when they can get an equally well-known brand at 10, and that is where the Great Western Cereal Co's position is weak. They have the grocer with them, but the consumer against them. It is also to be remembered that while the grocer can make a little something on Quaker Oats at 10 cents, he will net a loss on Mother's Oats at 10 if he reduces that brand to the same basis as Quaker. This would seem almost sure to reduce the sales of Mother's Oats in some quarters, as they cannot be sold below 12 cents to make a profit, and there are the aforesaid reasons why in many cases they cannot be sold at 12.

On the other hand the position of the Quaker Oats Co. is scarcely less dangerous from another reason. Though they have the consumer with them, on a question of price, they have the grocer against them, which is an extremely dangerous position to be in. Its logical result is for many grocers to cease selling Quaker Oats on the ground that they do not at 10 cents yield much profit themselves, while they prevent the sale of Mother's Oats, which would pay a profit.

Thus both concerns can scarcely get much benefit out of the conflict, and there is beginning to be a whisper that the result may be a combination between the two concerns at a not far distant day.

Mr. Callahan's New Post.

Lutz & Schramm Co., of Pittsburg, Pa., manufacturers of pickles and preserves, have transferred their Cincinnati manager, Mr. George F. Callahan, to the management of their New York City branch house, at 591 Hudson street. Mr. Callahan, having been manager of the Cincinnati branch for seven years, leaves that position with the best wishes of the trade and a host of friends. This concern operates branch houses in the following cities: Boston, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Detroit, New York, Scranton, Syracuse.

Northwest Agitated Over Fight Between Two Stores.

Big Lumber Company Owns Whole Town in Washington and Refuses to Let Other Merchants Enter. Lively Experience of Chain Store Men Who Went There to Sell Goods. Ordered Out of Hotel.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Spokane, Wash., May 24, 1908.

Many sensational features are contained in a battle royal now waging between the Williamson stores of Moscow, Idaho, and Palouse, Wash., and the Potlatch Lumber Co. of Potlatch, Idaho, which owns the last named town. The fight originated when Mr. Williamson sent M. Fansler, a salesman, to Potlatch with a line of samples and opened these in the sample room of the hotel, which was built and is owned by the lumber company. Mr. Fansler was assisted by T. A. Myklebust, a clerk in the Williamson store at Palouse.

Potlatch is entirely controlled by the lumber company, which owns the town site and every building in it, and will not sell a lot for any purpose. The company has a large department store in Potlatch and resents any effort of an outsider to poach on its preserve. Regular sales days are held at the store and excursion trains have been run over the company's railroad from Palouse and other points with low rates on account of these sales, thus placing the company store in direct competition with the stores of neighboring towns, but the company will not permit competition with its own store in Potlatch.

A. Loeb, manager of the Palouse store, gave this version of the controversy to the correspondent:—

"When Mr. Fansler opened his samples in the hotel sample room and began taking orders he was ordered out of the hotel and refused a sleeping room and the sample room. The city marshal, Mr. Campbell, called on him and took him to the office of William Deary, general manager of the Potlatch Lumber Co., twice. Mr. Deary told Fansler that the company would spend $10,000 if necessary to keep others from selling goods in Potlatch."

Mr. Myklebust said, in speaking of the controversy: "We met with great success and took many orders, after which the boarding house keeper told us he had been requested to refuse us board and lodging, but he refused to comply with the request. We went over the hill to Onaway, a rival town started adjoining Potlatch, and opened our sample rooms there, and many of the employees of the lumber company went over there through the mud and bought goods of us. City Marshall Campbell sent his son over to our sample room to buy a pair of shoes. The employees of the lumber company were apparently in sympathy with us and bought from us when they could, but nearly every one there is under obligations to the lumber company, which owns every building in town and the town site, and the people could not openly befriend us."

The Williamson Co. is considering the advisability of taking the matter into the courts to ascertain if it can be shut out of the town. In the meantime circulars setting forth the alleged facts and grilling the lumber company have been printed and circulated in Potlatch and adjoining territory.

One Picture Card Doubled California Orange Sales in One Part of England

Enterprising Way in which English Grocers go About the Sale of Foreign Fruit. Cases where Attractive Placards gave Large Results. Where American Fruit Men Fall Short.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 28, 1908.

From some Consular reports filed here during the week I obtained some interesting information regarding methods the retail grocers of England use to sell fruit. From the statements made the English grocers are much more enterprising about the sale of fruit than those of this country.

The store windows in England are kept bright with lithograph signs of Jamaica and Canadian fruit shipments, but very few American placards are anywhere to be seen, although considerable American fruit is regularly brought into that port. How effective such advertising may be is seen in the fact that one of the leading dealers, pointing to some clever pictures of Jamaica bananas and some very artistic cards of California seedless (navel) oranges, declared to the American Consul that he can sell fruit at a cent a pound more, and twice as much of it, if his display be accompanied with attractive placards.

In general, it may be said that if one were to judge by the prevalence of such card advertising as "Canadian apples," "Canadian fruit," one would imagine that no fruit reached the English market from the United States. The reason for the illusion is easily discovered, as Canadian shippers send plain and beautifully illustrated placards with nearly every consignment, while the American shippers send little or no advertising matter. The result is that the passer-by or possible purchaser is misled as to the quantity of fruit imported from the United States. American apples in particular are very popular, especially in the early season, and the sale of California oranges, particularly the seedless variety, is steadily on the increase.

A good illustration of the value of this pictorial advertising is found in the service rendered the Jamaica banana industry by the lithographed card. In touring England in 1892 and 1895 the writer noticed the scarcity of tropical fruit, and it was only some four years ago that the Jamaica banana importers entered on their compaign for the market of England. Then it was that suddenly a branch was opened in Bristol, hundreds of windows and billboards were placarded with bright-colored posters showing the cultivation and collection of bananas in their native environment, signs were carried about the streets, and the yellow fruit was sold for whatever it would bring. Bristol took to bananas, and the leading merchants there state that within two months the Jamaica banana trade had firmly established itself in that city, and by its ever changing and attractive placards, and better fruit, has held its own ever since.

Another illustration of the possibilities of advertising fruit is found in the hundreds of placards recommending Valencia oranges for influenza. Owing to an epidemic of this disease in Bristol of late, and the clever placards of Spanish fruit, the sale of Valencia oranges advanced over 500 per cent. so suddenly that dealers have scarcely been able to meet the demand.

It is evident, therefore, that if Americans wish to increase the sale of American fruit in Bristol and other parts of England, or even hold their share in the fruit market in England, they must meet the conditions created by other competitors and the ever greater demand by the English public for illustrated periodicals and advertising. One very artistic placard, showing some California seedless oranges with the legend

THE SIMPLE FACT THAT WE GUARANTEE THE SALE OF Post (Formerly called Elijah's Manna)
Toasties
IS PROOF OF MERIT.

We create the demand by continuous, heavy advertising, and the merit or quality pleases customers and holds them.

POST TOASTIES have a delightfully crisp, toasty flavour that appeals to young and old folks alike, and

"THE TASTE LINGERS."

Supplied by all Jobbers

Made by Postum Cereal Company, Limited, Battle Creek, Mich.

"The Aristocrat of the Orange World," has nearly doubled the sale of California oranges, and if American shippers would give more attention to the supplying of such advertising matter there is no doubt that the traffic in their fruit would greatly increase.

The English are natural travelers, and an appeal to their imagination is scarcely ever in vain; hence placards showing the orange plantations, apple orchards, etc., should be as effective as pictures of banana groves. During the latter part of April some of the finest apples ever sold in England were brought from Oregon and quickly disposed of at fancy prices. Had these apples been accompanied by an illustrated placard or two, giving some idea of the life in that distant Northwestern State, the name "Oregon" would have been more indelibly stamped on the mind of the apple buyers. A clever sentiment on such cards would add much to their force, and if the price can be stated distinctly and neatly it would be well to add that to the lettering.

Federal Food Decisions Now Nearly One Hundred

Department of Agriculture Issues Nos. 93-96 During the Week. Two are Technical and the Third Covers Denaturing of Imported Products when Used Both for Food and Other Purposes, Fourth as to Guarantees.

The United States Department of Agriculture has issued several new rulings during the week, being Food Inspection Decisions 93-96. The first has to do with denaturing imported products which are used both for food purposes and for other purposes, the second with the labeling of medicinal and table waters, and the third with the use of neutral alcoholic spirits distilled from beet sugar molasses and used in preparing compound whisky.

Of the above three the only one which has any special connection with grocers is the first, which is here reproduced:—

(F. I. D. 93.)

AMENDMENT TO REGULATION 34.

Certain classes of articles are offered for entry into this country which, under certain conditions, are ordinarily used for food purposes. The articles in question are used also for technical purposes. An example of such a product is the nutmeg. The mature and sound nutmeg is used for food purposes, while the defective nutmeg is used for the preparation of nutmeg oil, which has a technical use as an odoriferous principle. The defective nutmeg is not fit for food, but, on the other hand, is as well or even better suited for preparing oil.

Under Regulation 34 as it now stands, shipments of products which are ordinarily used for food, but which in the particular case are intended for use in the arts, must be so denatured as to render them unfit for food purposes, and the invoice accompanying the shipment must declare the technical use. It has proved impracticable to have all such products denatured before they are offered for entry into the United States.

The Board of Food and Drug Inspection recommends a change in Regulation 34 of Circular 21 of the Office of the Secretary, the amended regulation to become effective on the date of issue, and to read as follows:—

REGULATION 34, DENATURING.
(Section 11.)

Unless otherwise declared on the invoice, all substances ordinarily used as food products will be treated as such. Shipments of substances ordinarily used as food products intended for technical purposes should be accompanied by a declaration stating that fact. Such products should be denatured before entry, but denaturing may be allowed under customs supervision, with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary of the Treasury may release such products without denaturing, under such conditions as may preclude the possibility of their use as food products.

Late in the week the department issued a fourth decision, Food Inspection Decision No. 96. It laid down rules for making and exploiting a guarantee of purity on goods subject to the Federal food law, and is as follows:—

SERIAL NUMBER GUARANTY.

As a result of the numerous requests for specific information on various points connected with the filing of general guaranties with the Department, as well as on the use of serial numbers after they have been assigned, the following general instructions bearing on these questions are issued for the guidance of those interested:—

Fighting Federal Canned Goods Dating Bill.

National Retail Grocers' Association Persuades United States Senators to Oppose Bill Requiring Date of Packing to be Placed on Canned Meats.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio,
May 28, 1908.

Secretary Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, received Friday a telegram from Washington signed by the secretary of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association as follows:

> Senator Beveridge has moved to discharge the Agricultural Committee from consideration of the canned goods dating bill and for immediate passage of same. Wire immediately your Senators and also Senator Warren urging them to oppose it and asking them to give you a hearing.

Secretary Green at once addressed the following telegram to Senators Charles Dick and Joseph B. Foraker:—

> Kindly refrain from voting on Senator Beveridge's bill known as the dating bill. The National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States is opposed to it and would like to be heard before the bill is given consideration by the Senate. We consider it detrimental to the producer and distributer of food products, with no good resulting to the consumer.

The National Convention of Retail Grocers has passed into history. Those who attended left the convention full of enthusiasm and a determination to work for the advancement and betterment of the trade. The papers read and the addresses delivered were instructive and educational.

The discussion of interesting topics and the resolutions adopted were pleasing and satisfactory.

The growth of the organization is marvelous. The newly elected officers feel the responsibility, and with the power in hand will do all they can to advance the retail interests of the United States.

An Attractive Window Display.

A grocer in Southern Illinois tells of a novel window display which he says did him more good than any use to which he had put his windows in a long time.

It seems that he had just bought an American slicing machine, which, as it happened, reached him on a Friday. Bright and early Saturday morning he had the machine in the window with a small boy in a white apron working it.

As he tells it: "I had the boy alternate in cutting ham and bacon and dried beef, first one for awhile and then another. Crowds gathered around watching the smooth, even slices fall from the machine, and the boy had hard work to keep up with the demand, though the machine will do the work of several men slicing by hand. I really believe that nearly all the sliced meat sold in our town that day was bought at my store, and the best of it is that the demand is keeping up. I am selling many times the amount I formerly did."

The experience of this man is not an unusual one, and wise grocers will write the company at 54 Fifth avenue, Chicago, for particulars of the machine.

The Nerve to Refuse Unprofitable Business.

The world holds a surprisingly large number of merchants who lack the nerve to turn away unprofitable business. If it is a chance to sell goods, whether with or without a profit, there seems to be a lurking impression that they will be making a mistake if they let it go. Even the most intelligent merchants can be found within this class.

Thousands of times every day retail grocers are confronted with the objection: "But I can get it at Jones' at 10 cents." Ten cents pays nobody a profit, but in many, many cases the answer is: "Well, if Jones can sell it to you at 10 I can," and he does—sells it at a loss, instead of doing that which would make Jones sicker than anything else could—telling the customer to go to Jones' and get it. If all the orders at 10 cents were sent to Jones, the price would advance to a profitable figure just as soon as Jones could turn around. So long as foolish merchants accept the unprofitable business it continues to be unprofitable business and the cut-price which makes it unprofitable is perpetuated.

The feeling which leads a man to accept business which pays no profit is jealousy. He fears to let the customer out of his sight; he hesitates to let her enter his competitor's store. So to keep her sacredly within his own precincts he does business with her on a basis which would surely send him into bankruptcy if he did enough of it.

It is all very foolish. The most successful merchants are those independent enough to refuse to exchange their goods unless at a profit, to decline to fill a single order that doesn't itself pay its own way.

A Peculiar Attitude.

Peculiar indeed is the attitude of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Retail Grocers' and Butchers' League towards the Ohio law forbidding the sale of merchandise on Sunday. This law is just now being enforced against grocers who keep open stores on Sunday and five dealers of Pleasant Ridge were recently arrested on the common charge of Sunday selling. The cases were defended by the Cincinnati Association, which will endeavor to have the Sunday sale of groceries legalized so that a grocer may do business on Sunday quite as on any other day.

How utterly blind! Leaving the sacredness of the Sabbath day outside the discussion entirely, what a piece of arrant foolishness for a grocer not only to refuse to voluntarily take one rest day a week, but to oppose others when they seek to give it to him!

The man who works seven days a week is as sure as anything can be to eventually become a mere clod—an automaton, having regard neither for his family nor himself. And really not even intelligent regard for his business, for no man can run a business well that he sticks close to seven days a week.

Traitors.

In the "Grocery World's" frequent discussions of the plans of the local jobbers to destroy the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, the opinion has frequently been expressed that the jobbers' organization would never get very far in their campaign because of the members' disloyalty to each other. Any one who knows the Philadelphia jobbing trade intimately knows that there are men among them who forget every consideration save gain where their own interests are affected. Happily these are not many, but there are more than enough to kill any movement which depends on a united front.

As illustration, take an incident reported to the writer during the week. Of two of the leading members of the Wholesale Grocers' Association, one happened to be long on prunes. He appealed to his brother member, as a favor, to take some of his stock, agreeing eagerly to sell it at actual cost to himself.

The prune market at that time was 6¼ cents. The second jobber bought ten boxes at that price, which was represented to be cost, and found out in time to send them back that the seller had paid only 6 cents for them and that he had paid it because their quality was slightly below par.

There is an illuminating illustration of the attitude toward each other of certain of the members of the association who are fighting the Retail Grocers' Association, and who to succeed, in this fight particularly, must have no traitor within their ranks. A man who would ask his neighbor to do him a favor and then squeeze him out of ¼ cent a pound under a false pretense, would betray any agreement that the jobbers, in common cause, might make.

Many men do such tricks knowing their littleness, and those men can be held in line if kept under sufficiently close espionage. There is another class who do them in genuine ignorance that they are mean and dishonest—they consider them "business." Such men as these nobody can keep in line, because they don't know they are doing wrong.

The "Business Association of Pennsylvania."

The "Business Association of Pennsylvania," ostensibly organized to obtain the repeal of the Pennsylvania mercantile tax law, whose scheme was recently discussed in the "Grocery World," are asking various dealers for an expression of confidence. Their agents are circulating a form of statement, to be signed by merchants, expressing belief in the sincerity and bona fides of the enterprise. The "Grocery World" understands that some have signed, and some have not.

With each person approached for a signature, the association's agent, whoever he may be, leaves the following statement of assets and liabilities:—

ASSETS.
Total amount of money collected by agents and solicitors	$3,072.88
Total amount received by mail	140.00
	$3,212.88
Amount of exense in excess of receipts	77.97
	$3,290.85

LIABILITIES.
Total commission paid to agents and solicitors at 25 per cent.	$768.00
Railroad and car fare, hotel bills and other legitimate traveling expenses.	628.50
Printing	780.00
Postage, 27,000 letters, circulars inclosed, stamped envelopes and other correspondence	540.00
Office expense, including furniture, rent, etc	342.60
Salary, office help	128.00
Incidental expense	103.75
	$3,290.85

This shows that the agents of this association have collected over $3,000 from the retail merchants of Pennsylvania since they first started out!

The "Grocery World" has never expressed any opinion that this scheme was a fake. What it said was that inasmuch as the large majority of its promoters were not merchants, paid no mercantile tax and were therefore not personally interested in the matter at all, it looked as if it might be simply a game to make a temporary living for some people, and there is nothing in the statement of assets and liabilities to disprove this. In fact the figures show that at 25 per cent. and expenses the agents, for the work they have done, have been making a very fair thing.

The "Grocery World" also repeats that the logical organization to undertake any movement like the repeal of the mercantile tax law is the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, which would not have needed to collect $3,000 from the retailers of the State.

Trademark Suit Over "Georgia Coon" Molasses.

A case recently brought in this State by the Western Grocery Co. against Caffarelli Bros., both wholesale grocers of the State of Texas, introduces an interesting question of trade-mark law. The Western Grocery Co. adopted the words "Georgia Coon" to designate their syrups, and continued to use the words as a trade-mark until they sold their stock, trade-marks, and trade-names, to a buyer who continued to use the trade-mark on his syrups. The article designated became widely known in a city and a large territory tributary to it as the "Coon molasses" and retail merchants often ordered by that designation alone. Thereafter a third person began the use of the words "New Coon" on his molasses labels, and sold the articles extensively in the same territory. A retail merchant testified that some of his customers would ask for "Coon" molasses, or "Georgia Coon" or "New Coon" and he would give them either as he saw fit, as he considered it all "Coon molasses" and that it was all the same. The court held that the buyer was entitled to an injunction restraining the third person from using the word "Coon." The defendants defended partly on the ground that the Western Grocery Co. had sold as "molasses" a product that was mostly glucose, it being a rule of law that the owner of a trade-mark is not entitled to protection where he has used it to perpetrate a fraud. The court ruled, as to this, that as it was generally known that "Georgia Coon" was not pure molasses, this was not the kind of deception that deprived the plaintiffs of the right to protection.

Local Jobbers Form Another Association.

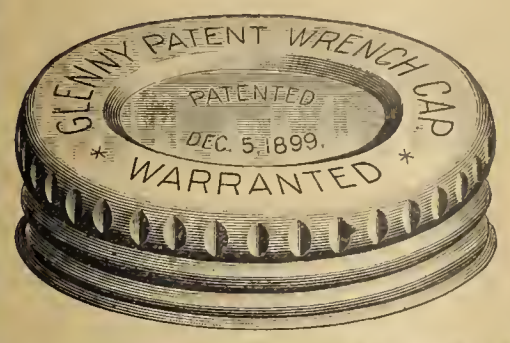
Now Have a "Locality Association" Composed of the Uptown Firms. Object is to Prevent the Price Cutting for which the Uptowners are Famous.

The wholesale grocery trade of Philadelphia, already choked to death with associations and leagues, not one of which is wholly successful, now has another—the Locality Association, composed exclusively, so the "Grocery World" is told, of uptown jobbers. The leaders in the movement are said to be William M. Montgomery & Co., Jonathan Graham & Co., Wilson & Richards, Charles Shaw & Co., John Price, and several others. The organization holds meetings at a hall at Germantown avenue and Berks street. George Landell, of Jonathan Graham & Co., is president.

The object of this latest association is to "remedy the various evils of the trade," which, being interpreted, may mean a variety of things. From an inside source it was learned that the real object is the maintaining of a working agreement to the end that the members, all of whom do a city business, will go slower than they have been going about cutting prices. On some lines the uptown jobbers have been the most relentless price-cutters in Philadelphia. Flour is a good illustration. Certain of the uptown jobbers have been known to sell staple brands of flour delivered in Frankford at a gross profit of 10 cents per barrel, which made an actual loss.

Western Packers Pay Pennsylvania Food Fines.

Libby, McNeill & Libby and the Cudahy Packing Co. Accused of Selling Meat Extract Containing Saltpetre. Last Named Company also Charged with Sale of Tomato Bouillon Containing Excess of Benzoate. Both Defendants Pay Fines Without Hearing.



Two large Western packers have came into conflict with the Pennsylvania food laws during the week, and both found it expedient to pay fines. The concerns referred to were Libby, McNeill & Libby, and the Cudahy Packing Co.

In the Cudahy case the prosecution was begun against James Rankin, Philadelphia manager, with office at Ninth street and Girard avenue, and the charge was the sale of tomato bouillon containing more than 1-10 of 1 per cent. of benzoate of soda, also extract of beef containing saltpetre.

The case against Libby, McNeill & Libby was against E. L. Tupper, local manager, and was based on the alleged sale of beef extract containing saltpetre. The defendants admitted that the extract was made from corned beef and claimed that it was not sold as first but as second grade. They had nothing further to say, however, when shown that the label bore no mark whatever to indicate that the contents were second instead of first grade.

A hearing was to have been held in both cases on Tuesday, but both defendants paid the fines in advance.

Agressive Oleo Campaign. Large Concerns Using Demonstration Method. Even Callanan Falls in Line. California Convention Delegate Preaching Minimum Retail Price. Small News of the Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, May 29, 1908.

The aggressive campaign of the oleomargarine manufacturers to introduce their product in the regular retail groceries has surprised many and seldom has so much been accomplished in the same length of time in getting an article of food before the public as in this case.

Before the recent decision of the courts sustaining the right to sell oleo in this State none of it was being sold openly. It was supposed that anybody selling any of the product would be severely punished under the provisions of the State law. In the six weeks since the courts held that oleo could legally be sold here it has been pushed to the public notice with remarkable skill.

Scores of grocery stores in all parts of the city are now offering oleomargarine for sale. Usually the sales start with a week or so, during which an attractive and intelligent young woman invites the customers entering the store to taste the oleo and see if they can detect the difference between it and butter. At the same time she explains the merits that are claimed for the oleo. Rolls of white and yellow oleo are on the table and the customer may taste one or both. Little vials and globules containing coloring matter are also shown and the demonstrator shows just how the white oleo may be made yellow by pouring a little of the liquid and mixing it up with a knife or similar instrument, just as salt could be worked into butter by the housewife, the operation taking only a few moments in the case of a roll of less than a pound.

One of the companies, the John F. Jelke Co., Jersey City, has a corps of these demonstrators introducing oleo into one store after another. It is said that some of the other companies are taking advantage of the first company's enterprise by following up the work and trying to make sales without themselves having any of the expense of conducting demonstrations.

The persuasive powers of the oleo people may be judged from the fact that even L. J. Callanan, the Vesey street grocer, has been won over and is now selling oleomargarine. Less than a month ago he said that in his sixty years' experience in the business he had never sold a pound of oleo and he did not propose to begin at this late day. It is not often that he changes his mind and when he does there must be a reason. When your correspondent asked him for his reason, he said: "I have oleomargarine here now because it is being offered exactly for what it is. The labeling and the other precautions are such that there is no danger of the fraudulent substitution of the oleo for butter. The old way was to try to sell the oleomargarine for butter and that was what I opposed. I see no objection to the sale of oleomargarine to people who know exactly what they are buying."

That seems to be the attitude of a lot of other grocers. The department stores were first selected for the demonstrations, but the manufacturers soon turned to the regular grocers and the product has also been placed on sale in some meat markets.

Some of the grocers who now have oleo in stock still look askance at the coloring part of the business. They ask what is the use of changing the color, but the manufacturers deem it important to show people how to introduce the color if it is so desired. A globule of the coloring liquid goes with every pound that is sold of the butterine or oleomargarine. Large buyers receive a vial of the coloring liquid.

The two bills which were introduced in the Legislature at its recent session for the purpose of absolutely prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine in this State were both defeated, so that there is now a clear field for the business. The retail butchers were among those who worked against the bills They expect that if the sale of oleomargarine gets on a firm basis in this State they will get higher prices for the fat and suet which will be in demand for oleo purposes.

The butterine is sold at 20 cents a pound at all the stores into which it has been introduced by the company making the demonstrations, which company will not allow any cutting, it is announced. It is said that the big sales are expected to come later in the year when the price of natural butter goes up. One of the claims made is that the butterine is especially superior to the grades of butter commonly used for cooking purposes.

The California delegation to the recent national convention of the retail grocers remained over here on its way home for a few days after the other Western delegations had gone. In the past week the Californians have been somewhat busy trying to convert the Brooklyn members to the idea of maintaining minimum prices as is done in California. The subject was discussed at the regular meeting of the Brooklyn Association and at a number of informal meetings. Some think that the plan is more feasible in Brooklyn than in New York. As in the case of the New York Society, which discussed the matter a week before, no definite action was taken.

The Californians were entertained by a theatre party and by several other social affairs, including a reception at the Cortelyou Club and trips to Coney Island. The delegations from other States were similarly entertained before they left New York.

India Will Still Continue Her Tea Advertising in this Country. Chances to Sell American Groceries in Canada. Difficult to Import Brazil Coffee Direct. The Grocery Business in San Salvador.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

May 29, 1908.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Indian Tea Cess Committee, held within the last few days, it was resolved to continue the existing arrangement for advertising in the United States jointly with Ceylon, and the sum of $34,285 was voted for this purpose. The total to be contributed by India and Ceylon for the purpose indicated is $60,000. The committee also decided to maintain the separate India advertising fund which they started in the United States during 1905 and to allot to it a further sum of $20,000. To maintain and to extend the scheme which is in progress for pushing Indian tea in Belgium and Germany $25,000 was voted. An Indian tea house is to be opened in Berlin shortly. The committee likewise agreed to continue the green tea bonus at the rate of 1 cent per pound on 2,000,000 pounds of green tea to be manufactured during the coming season.

In the Kingston and adjoining Canadian districts Consul H. D. Van Sant states that the market for American lard, hams and bacon, for high-class Western canned meats and poultry, and for canned goods and California fruits, could be increased. While the Canadian production in these lines is growing better each year, owing to improved methods, the American article still leads and the advantage of milder climate and more extensive and superior methods of culture and canning has not yet been overcome. The exposures of several years ago injured the sale of canned meats at the time, but since then the United States inspection law has resulted in the canning of superior goods, and if this new line is introduced it will command a large sale. The Consul has frequently heard the wish expressed for American canned goods. Many Canadian buyers ask for American brands. Detroit and Western lard shipped to Canada last winter commanded a quick sale.

Consul-General George E. Anderson, of Rio de Janeiro, states that there is an increasing number of individuals and firms doing business in the United States in coffee which display an anxiety to purchase coffee direct in the Brazilian markets to whom some information as to how the export coffee business is conducted is necessary. Under ordinary conditions it is not practicable for dealers in the United States to become importers unless they are able to establish connection with a Brazilian house of an exceptional nature—not only a house in which there may be confidence, which may of course easily be had, but one so situated that it can buy and grade coffee of the particular grades needed by the small importer and do this at less expense than the great American importing houses.

Consul-General Samuel E. Magill, of San Salvador, sends to the State Department, by way of general information, the following data:—

Grocery stores and butcher shops, as conducted in the United States, do not exist in Salvador, the supplies for the home table and the restaurant being purchased daily from a central market, where stalls or stands, conducted by women, carry stocks of vegetables, meats, poultry, eggs, fish, fruits, etc., received daily from the surrounding country, and daily sold to the cooks. No provision being made in these stands for refrigeration, and few homes being furnished with ice chests, a fresh supply of food daily is necessary.

The mass of the people here live on corn and beans, prepared in various forms, together with the cheaper grades of meat; the wealthier homes are bountifully supplied with better meat—beef, tongue, pork, mutton, rabbit, chicken and pigeon—and with some vegetables and fruit.

Cereals prepared in the various forms so well known and so largely used for breakfast foods in the United States are little seen here, and would be difficult to introduce, for it is the local custom to take only coffee and bread, sometimes eggs and fruit, for breakfast.

Sugar and coffee are produced here, but China supplies tea. Dried fruits, flour, flavoring extracts, baking powder, nuts and raisins come from the United States.

Vegetables and fruits being grown here in great variety and obtainable practically all the year round, there is but a small market in Salvador for canned goods, and the demand for such things as meats, fruits, oysters, jellies, etc., in cans or bottles, is further limited by the heavy import duty charged on such merchandise. Only three houses of importance carry canned goods and preserves and these only carry them as side lines. (Names of these firms filed in the Bureau of Manufactures.)

Salmon, oysters and an occasional breakfast food come from the United States; soups and jams and cheap candies from England; olives, peas, asparagus, pickles, mustard, cheese, capon, mushrooms, plums, and fruits generally from France. The bulk of this class of merchandise is bought in France.

Butler Chain Stores Rumored For Sale.

Big Block of Stock Thrown on Market. James Butler Said to be Weary of Philadelphia Conditions. Concern has Added no New Stores for Months.

There is reason for the statement that the Philadelphia chain stores of the William Butler Co. are for sale. Since the death of William Butler, the founder, several years ago, the business has been run by a corporation, of which Mrs. William Butler was the majority stockholder. James Butler, the New York chain-store man, was also largely interested, and is reported to be anxious to close out his Philadelphia affiliations entirely.

There are 117 stores in the Butler chain in Philadelphia. No new ones have been added for a long time. The enterprise must be reasonably prosperous, however, since it last year declared a dividend of 17½ per cent. The Scannels, relatives of Butler, who managed the Philadelphia stores for a while, have nearly all left and are now inaugurating a chain of similar stores in Baltimore. A block of 155 shares of the Butler stock was recently thrown on the market by one of the Scannels, the object being to raise the money to put into the Baltimore business. The price asked was $125 per share, against a par value of $100.

For some time there has been a rumor that a combination of the smaller chain stores was about to buy the Butler stores, but there is no confirmation of this as yet.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is unchanged as to spot teas, and in fair demand for the season. The business is scarcely equal to last year, however. The market for new Formosas opened during the week on a basis slightly higher than last year. Even at the advance, however, the teas will probably be bought. New Congous also opened, on a basis possibly 10 per cent. below last year. The end of the season is approaching, and holders of large stocks of any grade are anxious to move.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee is about unchanged. The demand is still from hand-to-mouth, and gives no indication of becoming anything more in the near future. The sale of the first lot of valorization syndicate coffee occurred on Friday, too late, in view of the holiday, to obtain results for this issue. The syndicate undoubtedly had the sale well in hand, however, and is believed to have limited the price on a basis of 8½ cents for Santos 7s, green, which was slightly higher than the market ruling at that time. Mild coffees are firm and unchanged. Java and Mocha steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market has shown some reaction during the week, and raws have sold at an advance. As the week closes the market is firm. There has been no change in refined, except a 5-point advance by the Federal. There seems no likelihood of any sharp immediate advance. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is opening up well.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose still remains unchanged, though corn is soaring high. Compound syrup is dull and rules at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is in fair demand at ruling prices. Molasses is not in particularly good demand, but is scarce and firmer.

Fish.

The fish market is decidedly dull. Prices on all grades of mackerel are nominally unchanged, but it is reasonably certain that any buyer of a good-sized lot could obtain concessions. The demand for mackerel is light. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged in price and in light demand. Domestic sardines are unchanged. New goods are obtainable in any quantity desired on a basis of $3.10 Eastport. Spot goods are moving from hand-to-mouth, somewhat below, when the sale is made from second hands, the packers' market. Salmon is unchanged and in fair demand. Prices on futures of some grades will be named soon.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged. There is a fair demand on spot at ruling prices and a light demand for futures at unchanged prices. Prospects are for a good pack. Corn is in some demand. Futures are moving to some extent, and spot corn is firmer. Peas are exceedingly dull, and as to spot goods, very weak. There are some considerable stocks of old peas in the hands of the trade, bought at high prices, while new peas are now ready for delivery on a much lower basis. The situation is not especially encouraging to the holder who wants to get out whole. Peaches are unchanged, no price having been named for new goods other than that quoted last week. Apples are weak and not much wanted. The small line of Baltimore canned goods is unchanged and in light request. California canned goods are unchanged and dull. There has been no general naming of new prices as yet, though one packer is reported to have made a price on cherries considerably below last year.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are firm, but without further change in price. The demand is fair. Peaches are selling fairly well, at prices that still tend downward. Apricots show no change, either spot or future, and the demand for both is light. Currants are in fair demand at unchanged prices. Raisins are dull and weak. Future citron is still in fair demand. Dates and figs dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show from 10 to 20 cents advance for the week. In a large way the quotation is $2.70 to $2.80. Imported pea beans have also advanced to $2.30. The demand for pea beans is fair. Marrows also show a sympathetic advance to about $2.50. California limas are now quoted at 4¾ cents on the coast, which means a trifle over 5½ cents delivered in

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

the East. This is an advance of about ⅛ cent. Split yellow peas, which were last week quoted at $6.75 per barrel in a large way, are now $7.30. Lack of supply is the reason. Other grades are about unchanged.

Butter.

The butter market is firm and unchanged. Butter arriving now is showing fancy quality and meets with ready sale either for consumptive or speculative purposes. There will likely be a firm market at unchanged prices as long as the make continues as fine as now. Near-by butter is getting scarcer and is selling on about the same basis as Elgin butter. Print butter is firm at about 1 cent per pound over tub.

Eggs.

Fancy eggs are selling about on the same basis as a week ago. There has been some decline in under grades owing to the warm weather, and very few of the eggs arriving are bringing the top price. Present conditions are likely to exist for about two weeks, after which production will decrease and the market become firmer. Stocks of eggs in storage are about the same as a year ago.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at ½ cent above a week ago. Cheese is showing more grass and better quality every week. Old cheese is about exhausted and the consumptive trade is now almost entirely on new. What few old cheese are about are bringing 3 cents more than new. The general cheese market is selling 15 per cent. below a year ago, but the market is very healthy, and if there is any change it will be upward.

Provisions.

The provision market is about stationary. A good trade is reported for everything in smoked meats. Both pure and compound lard are selling well at ruling prices. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned goods are having a seasonable demand and a satisfactory trade is reported throughout.

Produce.

Old Pennsylvania potatoes, 90 cents to $1 per bushel; old York State, 90 cents to $1 per bushel, demand fair; sweet potatoes, firsts, $1.25 to $1.50 per hamper; seconds, 75 cents per hamper, demand slow; Bermuda onions, $1.35 per crate; Texas, 90 cents to $1.25 per crate; Egyptian, $2.75 per 2-bushel bag, demand fair; spinach, 50 to 75 cents per barrel, demand slow; rhubarb, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches, demand good; watercress, $2 per 100 bunches, demand fair; scullions, 75 cents to $1 per 100 bunches, demand fair to good; red radishes, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches; white, $1.50 per 100 bunches, demand fair; salad, 50 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; asparagus, 5 to 20 cents per head, demand fair; cauliflower, No. 1, 5 to 10 cents per head; No. 2, 2 to 3 cents per head, demand fair; beets, 10 to 12 cents per bunch, demand fair; carrots, 3½ cents per bunch, demand fair.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch, demand poor; apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3.50; Spy, $3 to $3.50; Russets, $2 to $3, demand fair; pineapples, $2.25 to $3 per box, demand good; lemons, $2.25 to $3 per box, demand fair; California oranges, $2.75 to $4 per box; Floridas, $3.50 to $4 per box, demand fair to good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Next to tomatoes, for both spot and future delivery, the buyers' attention just now is attracted to new peas, pineapples and strawberries, as well as other new goods. The tomato market was quite active last week, and there is a slightly firmer undertone to it which is not shown in the quotations. Steady buying of spot goods for prompt shipment wears away the visible supply without attracting much attention and keeps the market prices steady, and no notice of it is taken until a number of supposed large holders announce that they are sold out. The statistic sharps are trying to prove each other to be in error as to the size of the stocks on hand unsold to meet the demand between now and next August or September. Official information on that subject encourages the holders regardless of guesses. For future delivery the tomato market continues firm, and a number of sellers at the low figures have already sold up to the quantity they decided to accept contracts for, with 100 per cent. delivery guaranteed, and have withdrawn from the market. Based on the cost of canning under the most favorable circumstances the coming season to-day's prices for futures look safe for the jobbers to begin buying them to at least a moderate extent. The continued rainy weather is worrying the canners of sweet corn and discourages the growers of it who think they see more money in growing field corn instead this season, which means a reduced acreage for canning purposes.

The character of the buying of spot goods continues as heretofore, namely in small assorted lots as the goods are wanted, and the fact that they embrace almost every article in the list rather shows that the jobbers, as a rule, are carrying small stocks, having added little or nothing to their holdings since last fall, meantime working off their principal lines. The canned goods market is gradually getting into a better position.

No. 2.

As demand governs supply, price must necessarily regulate over-production or under-consumption. It has been demonstrated that supply should be reckoned according to demand, and yet price is a stimulant that enables demand to at least be consequential. When supply becomes too weighty, the wheels refuse to revolve, but price lubricants will generally furnish the power wanted, and, presto change, supply is off again at a rapid diminishing pace. If packers would cease a bit vying one with another in keeping the raw stock price extraordinary and study the relationship of price and demand, there would be little necessity for the sale of spots at a loss and futures at cost. High price must necessarily mean decreased demand, especially in money panic periods, and as a result the recent tomato panic was bound to follow and continue until the price was adjusted in accordance with supply and decreased consumption. With these conditions so fresh in the minds of all, as the pendulum is about to swing in the opposite direction (for pendulums never stand still), would it not be well for the buyer to take notice, for the reverse must follow if the future orders are not placed in sufficient volume encouraging preparatory pack in relationship to probable demand and at prices justifying the undertaking, otherwise the result must be demand greater than supply, increased price, decreased sales and profits.

As the clouds of the tomato panic roll away, it is evident that the "pick of the pile" can no longer be secured at 72½ cents for 3s, and while now and then a scattering car is still obtainable on this basis, the most of the lots remaining unsold show irregularity of some description, and under present conditions governing we quote standard 3s at 75 to 77½ cents, with off-standards from 70 to 72½ cents, depending upon quality and condition. Twos remain quiet, with volume of business small, on the basis of 50 to 52½ cents, and as stocks are limited there is little inclination to force orders.

Future tomatoes continue quiet, with but little business going. Most packers who figure closely show little disposition to accept business at prevailing quotations, and since weather conditions have been unfavorable for the last two weeks they seem content in waiting results and what the future may bring forth. Continued heavy rains have compelled the farmers to remain under cover and several days' sunshine will be requisite before fields can be plowed and prepared for the reception of the tomato plant, which though mighty as a giant at times, is as tender as a young lamb during the period of propagation and necessarily requires careful treatment and suitable preparation of growing ground, otherwise the yield will not justify the arduous labors demanded for its successful cultivation. Few reliable packers are willing to countenance future orders under 77½ to 80 cents, depending upon brand and quality, and most alert buyers continue to shun offerings under this figure, fearing that the delivery will not be accordingly as satisfactory, at least if the market has advanced by this time, for there is little inducement to the buyer to purchase futures without he feels there is a possibility of an advance at delivery time.

Spot corn seems to be gaining vigor from its relationship to the new packed article and adverse weather conditions with an assured late planting season, which causes the spot holders to stiffen up their prices and refuse orders on the basis named in our last quotations. For immediate shipment, shoepeg is held on the basis of 66½ to 77½ cents, depending upon brand and quality, while Southern packed Maine style is difficult to locate under 60 to 65 cents.

Owing to the conditions as already described, there is little inclination among packers to accept further business for future corn, at least until the Northeast winds cease to blow and a week of sunshine follows, enabling growers to prepare the ground, which is at present soaked with water and mud. Demand for seed corn continues, as there seems to be a fear of the lack of germination, at least in the usual preparation, and all indications point to a stronger corn market. While there is but little inclination to quote future prices, the nominal quotations are 70 to 77½ cents for shoepeg and 60 to 65 cents for Southern Maine style. It would be difficult to fill orders for large quantities on this basis.

Spices.

The market has a firm undertone, with a slight upward tendency. Supplies are small. There are no special figures to report. Buying has been from hand to mouth, but we look for more satisfactory business from now on.

Pepper.—The market is, no doubt, firmer for spots as well as futures. Conditions generally remain unchanged during the week.

Cayennes in better demand, but without change in price.

Cloves steady and very scarce. There is a very good spot demand, which will increase.

Pimento (Allspice).—Somewhat firmer and prices are slightly higher. Supplies are small.

Mace very scarce. We can report a good inquiry, due to season.

Nutmegs very active at present, due to record prices. The present market is certainly an advantageous one from a buying standpoint.

Cassias.—Saigon and China are steady; Batavia is very scarce, firm in price and in very fair demand.

Gingers somewhat firmer and in better inquiry.

Seeds.—In good demand for pickling needs. Celery, Caraway and Mustard are all firm, but unchanged.

MARKET NOTES.

North Carolina blackberries are not especially plenty and the price ranges from 12 to 14 cents. The demand is excellent and the quality of the fruit good.

Huckleberries are coming North in comparatively small shipments, the source of supply being North Carolina. The price is 12 to 14 cents.

The first Jersey peas are in and show good quality. They range from $1.25 to $1.50 per basket. The demand is good.

A few string beans are coming from North Carolina, and the price averages $1.50 for one-third barrel basket and $2 for half-barrel. The demand is active for anything good.

Lima beans are slow at $3 per basket. The quality is not especially good and the supply not heavy.

The first pie cherries are now in market, coming from Virginia, and commanding 50 to 60 cents per basket. The quality is good for early fruit.

New Jersey asparagus is coming in large quantities, much in bad order. Anything good commands 15 to 20 cents, but stuff is selling at 3 cents up.

Virginia cabbage is glutted, and is scarcely bringing freight. Good cabbage has sold as low as 45 cents per barrel. The demand is moderate.

Florida watermelons are scarce. Anything good brings 75 cents each. The demand is light.

Florida cantaloupes are selling cheap—$1.50 to $2 per crate. The quality is mostly poor.

The first Mississippi tomatoes are in, commanding $1.15 for a carrier of four baskets. Florida tomatoes average $3, and show better quality than the Mississippi. The demand is good, but the price will likely be lower.

Florida corn is coming in better quality and averages $2.50 per crate. The demand is slow.

What Oleo Did for Three Men.

Convicted of conspiring against the Government in the matter of oleomargarine frauds, Hugh I. Armour, a young grocer of Wilmington, Del., in the United States Court last week was sentenced to pay fines aggregating $7,500 and to serve two terms of eighteen months' imprisonment each, which, however, run concurrently, so that he will serve but one term. The court directed that he serve his imprisonment in the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga. Otis L. Birckley and J. Willis Hathaway, the other conspirators, already have been sentenced to terms of nine months each in the county workhouse, with $1,500 fines imposed in each case. The arrests of Armour and his employees, Hathaway and Birckley, revenue men say, were the most important, as regards oleomargarine frauds, of recent years. It was shown during the trial of the accused men that Armour purchased large quantities of white oleo and colored it in Wilmington, it being disposed of by Hathaway and Birckley. The oleo was colored and cut into cakes the size of butter in an East Side stable, and revenue officers had great difficulty in running down the band. Secret service men who investigated the cases found that Armour was operating two oleomargarine factories in Wilmington, one in Atlantic City and another at 2030 South Sixteenth street, Philadelphia. When these factories were raided two years ago Armour fled to the mountains in West Virginia. Emmett L. Rudman, the revenue officer in charge of the case, said that thousands of pounds of oleo were made in the Armour plants and that Armour, through his assistants, disposed of this, defrauding the Government out of taxes probably in excess of $50,000. When the Philadelphia plant was raided Armour could not be found. After a search through North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, he was found hiding with companions in the heart of the Allegheny mountains.

Refiners End Sugar Abuse.

Adopt New Plan which Will Compel Buyer to Take Sugar in Seven Days. Under Old Plan Some have Taken Six Months. Will Greatly Reduce Speculation.

All of the sugar refiners have adopted a new method of selling sugar, and for the time being every buyer, wholesale or retail, will be obliged to conform with it. The new plan requires buyers to remove their sugar in seven days, as against as much as six months in certain sections under the old plan.

The old method was loose in the extreme. A buyer could order sugar to-day and let the refiner carry it all the way from thirty days to six months. In New York it is stated that certain sugar buyers let their sugar lie six months before taking it away. There was everything to gain by this and nothing to lose, because the price was guaranteed until the day of shipment, and there was no storage to pay. Naturally, the plan degenerated into an abuse, and the refiners have cut it out at last.

Under the new plan a buyer is given seven days to remove his sugar and no longer. If delivery is not asked for within seven days the refiners will either cancel the order or compel the jobber to take it, according to the status of the market at the time. Naturally the price is only guaranteed for the seven days.

The plan will put an end to much of the sugar speculation which has been indulged in under the old plan, and will cause sugar buying to be done by smaller and more frequent orders.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Allentown, Pa., May 4, 1908.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find our trimonthly "Grocery Bulletin," which we are issuing and mailing regularly to about 8,000 housewives in this town and vicinity. It being our aim and object to go after the high-class trade, we have adopted this method as an experiment, as compared with newspaper advertising. The cost of this work to us, in the manner in which we are handling it, is hardly as much as newspaper work costs us, and we feel that we are having much better results, as we are now reaching the class of trade we most particularly desire and some of which never read newspaper advertisements.

Would be pleased to have your criticism and suggestions for its betterment.

Thanking you most kindly, I am,

Yours truly,

FRANK N. MAYER,

Manager of Grocery Department.

The store paper that came with this letter was quite a superior production. It had four pages, 6 x 9 inches, and was well and carefully prepared throughout. The paper and the printing were both good and of the general effect even the highest class grocer in a large city could well be proud.

* * *

The first, second and third pages of Harned-Earley's paper are devoted to straight grocery advertising, almost exclusively of proprietary goods. They don't tell me whether they have any kind of deal with the manufacturer to bear part of the expense of this advertising, but unless they do I should advertise more of my own brands. Advertising proprietary goods is all right, when they pay a profit—in fact it is a very good business policy—but advertising one's own brands is better, since there is no competition. On the three pages there are sixteen private brands advertised, every one of which is somebody else's. This is a mistake, in my judgment. The finest kind of a grocery business is that done on goods packed under one's own labels. Nobody else has them, and to get them the customer must come to your store. When you've built up a business on such things you've got something. When you build it up on Cook's Flaked Rice, for instance, you may have something and you may not, for any other grocer can supply Cook's Flaked Rice as well as you can.

BACHMAM'S READING PRETZELS

We are Agents for Allentown and Vicinity.

I call this mighty good grocery advertising. It is distinctly high grade. The little cuts scattered through the paragraphs add decidedly to the effect, though possibly in a few cases they are a little large for the space. My idea of a cut, as to size, is the clam chowder cut. It is large enough to show well, and not large enough to look crowded, as the Luncheon cheese cut does. The Lobster cut on the third page is also a good size. Illustrations are a very valuable feature of an advertisement, but they can be overdone. There can be too many of them, and they can be too large.

Just a word as to the wording of some of the advertisements contained in this paper. I note that Burnham's Clam Chowder is "carefully and scientifically prepared." To know that a food is scientifically prepared doesn't appeal to me at all. I want to know that it is prepared deliciously, that it has zest and flavor, and I believe ninety-nine out of one hundred people are the same way. Possibly it is a mistaken way, but we must reckon with people as they are, not as they should be. Looking over the text of this paper it occurs to me that the Harned-Earley Co. need to work up more enthusiasm about the palatability of their goods. There is very little of the mouth-watering quality about their advertising.

The fourth page of this store paper is devoted to a few recipes and some "Points Worth Remembering." The latter are generalities like "The desire to buy anything cheap is a mania with some people."

The heavy strawberry crop is already beginning to show itself, and the market has practically been glutted during the past week. The price has ranged from 5 to 15 cents, the fruit coming from New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland. Everywhere the crop promises large. The demand is good.

MAGAZINE NOTES.

In addition to an enticing complete novel—"The Plague of a Heart," by Helen Milecete—the June "Lippincott's" contains a number of extraordinarily good short stories. "Little Billy Higgins's Rhubarb Money," by John L. Mathews, is deliciously funny and will make the most blasé reader chuckle. Will Levington Comfort contributes "The Lone War," a grimly realistic picture of strenuous life in the Philippines. "The Birth of Irony," by Katharine Holland Brown, is a tale of the Cave-men, as striking as it is original. "Lady Tommy," by Owen Oliver, is a fascinating romance of "high life." There are several others also, besides some bright articles on seasonable topics and a sixteen-page humorous section. The June "Lippincott's" makes excellent summer reading.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Tokay Wine.

A very sweet wine made at Tokay, a town in Northern Hungary. It is somewhat aromatic, and is generally used as a dessert or liquor wine. In Hungary this wine is the national beverage. It improves very much by keeping, and old Tokay, called Vino Vitrauno, the demand for which greatly exceeds the supply, has been sold at £36 a dozen at Cracow, which is the principal depot for it.

Imperial Tokay is a very rich and luscious product with a rare delicacy, but rather peculiar taste.

There are also Californian and other Tokays.

Tonka Beans.

The seed of a tree known as Dipterix odorata, which grows to a great size in the West Indies, also in Guiana, the great Amazon valley, and other parts of South America, but especially in Cochin, China and Venezuela, which latter country alone exports some 100,000 pounds yearly from Ciudad Bolivar.

The pods are of oblong shape, but contain only a single seed, which has a very agreeable and aromatic odor. It is used extensively as a substitute for vanilla.

Truffles.

The word truffle is from the Latin tuber (signifying a swelling).

Truffles are an edible fungi, and may be called underground mushrooms—or rather, vegetable tubers, possessing an animal rather than a vegetable flavor.

They seem to share the capricious nature of the mushroom in regard to cultivation, and are seldom found twice in the same place. A piece of ground that may yield a great quantity one year may be quite fruitless the next. They are, however, mostly found in loose soil about a foot deep, under or near old oak, birch or walnut trees, and are of irregular size, round shape, and dark brown color outside, while the insides may be brown, grey or white.

Those from the South of France are the most highly prized, but truffles are also pretty abundant in Italy, Spain and Holland.

There are three species of truffles found in France, the black, the white, and the red, the latter having a flavor of garlic. They are found in all soils, but mostly in oak forests, or where the earth is damp and calcareous, thriving best in sterile soil.

The black or winter truffles are the most esteemed, the most famous being those found around Perigueux and Angoulême, and known as the variety T. melanosporum.

In appearance the ordinary truffle is about the size of a walnut, with a rough brown warty surface closely akin to the potato, which it likewise resembles in consistency, though not in color.

They seem to grow in clusters, without roots, 5 or 6 inches below the surface of the earth; and, not yielding to cultivation, they must be sought for in chance places, from November to March.

In some parts of Italy the domestic pig is commonly driven out to the woods with a cord attached to the hind leg, and the holder of it observes where he begins to root; indeed, if not sharply watched, the animal devours the prize before he can be stopped. In some districts the truffle is called swinebread, from being so keenly relished by these fine-nosed animals.'

Scarcely is there a preserving establishment in France at this moment that does not, among other alimentary products, preserve also truffles—particularly at Bordeaux and Marseilles.

The truffle appears to have become as indispensable to the dinner table of the "noblesse" as the aromatic sprig of garlic to the frugal repast of the peasant. They are chiefly used in sauces, soups, and as stuffing for poultry.

The preserving process adopted in Bordeaux is a very simple one—the truffles being partially boiled, as tomatoes, asparagus, and certain other vegetables, and then sealed up in jars, tins or bottles, in their own diluted juice. Truffles should be light according to their size, elastic when pressed, and of agreeable aroma. When dried, or exposed to the air long, much of their flavor is lost.

Truffles are seldom eaten alone, but are used in soups, gravies, ragouts, and other highly-seasoned dishes.

Condensed Milk Suit.

Suit has been brought in the United States Circuit Court of Wisconsin by the Borden's Condensed Milk Co. against the Horlick's Malted Milk Co., of Racine, Wis., seeking to recover $50,000 alleged damages to the business of the former through officials or agents of the latter. The plaintiff also asks that the defendant be permanently enjoined from claiming that he is the originator of malted milk, and further asks that the defendant be enjoined from interfering in any way with the advertising matter and fountain jars delivered to druggists by the plaintiff. The chief basis for this suit is the long standing dispute between the two rival companies as to the origin of the process of making malted milk. The Horlick Co. has asserted in its advertising matter and elsewhere that it manufactures the "original and only genuine malted milk." The Borden Co. denies this claim, alleging that a similar process of malting milk to that of the Horlick concern was in use in Germany as early as 1876.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

LX.—Getting Next Competitors.

Your competitor does not wear horns.

A great many grey hairs are brought out on the heads of business men because of worrying about what competition will do, and especially some one particular competitor. It seems there is always one competitor who is more to be dreaded than all the rest. One who tries to sell his goods at cost, or is especially obnoxious in some other way.

Probably you have been getting all your information about this competitor from your customers, and if that is the case you can bet that it has been colored up to make your competitor appear much worse than he really is, and about nine times out of ten you can also bet the same customer is telling like stories about you to that same competitor.

Just contract the habit of paying no attention to such information, but get acquainted with "the animal," so you can base your judgment on something more than rumor of the worst kind. Tell him that you have heard so many unreasonable reports about him that you would like to know about what he really was and was not doing. He will more than likely meet you at least half way in friendliness, and then you can talk over trade abuses. You are both imposed upon enough, without imposing upon each other, why not put your heads together and eliminate some of the impositions of your customers which are only made possible by the fact that they are now keeping you from talking over these matters together.

An Oleo Incident.

I saw something in one of the Baltimore papers last week that gave me one of the biggest sorry feelings I've ever had.

It was a dispatch from Wilmington, Del., that a young grocer there named Hugh I. Armour had been convicted of breaking the oleo laws and had been sentenced to eighteen months in jail. Besides that he has to pay a lot of fines amounting to $7,500! Think of it! A couple of other fellows who were in the deal with him were sent to the workhouse for nine months and told to pay fines of $1,500.

The other two were named Otis L. Birckley and J. Willis Hathaway. Them I didn't know, but I did know Armour. He is a decent kind of fellow you wouldn't expect such things of. He has a young wife and is about quarter gone with consumption. He'll die in jail, I have no doubt.

There was nothing new about the scheme these fellows worked. They bought oleo white, colored it yellow behind the door somewhere and then palmed it off as butter.

Oh this rotten oleo business! Every time I think about it I feel like calling down a curse on the man who first invented oleo. I don't know a thing that has brought more wickedness into the world. More lying and stealing and false pretence. Oleo is the mother of lawbreakers and always has been.

I know grocers who sell oleo who are as straight as a string about it. They do as the law says, and sell it for what it is.

But for every oleo seller who does that there have always been five hundred that didn't. Maybe there's less crooked ones to-day, because the Government has the thing pretty well rounded up. But the woods are still full of thieves and liars whose particular form of vice is selling fake butter—every once in a while you can read where a bunch has been smoked out.

There must be some kind of a fascination about oleo, the way it ropes good men in and turns 'em into criminals. I suppose it looks like such a slick and easy business. That's on account of the stuff's appearance. You take a pound of oleo and it'll look pretty good to most people. It has the same color as butter—why shouldn't it when they're both colored with the same thing? And it has the look of butter, and if you ain't watching close it has a faint taste and smell of butter.

It's such an easy thing to wrap it up for butter, when oleo's 10 cents a pound and butter's 40. There ain't one chance out of a thousand that the customer'll know the difference. He may think it's a little mild, but there's nothing unusual about mild butter.

I knew a grocer who started in to sell oleo about three years ago—started in honestly. Butter was high and he did business with a lot of poor factory people who couldn't afford it. So he got hold of a good clean brand of oleo, took out a license and started in to sell it on the level.

Business was poor that year. Nobody in this particular town had much money, and I happen to know that this grocer's business fell off about 20 per cent. and collections were fierce.

One day an old clerk left him and he had to put on a new man. After it had been going on for over a week the grocer found that his new clerk, who was a fat-headed sort of a chump, had been getting "butter" out of the oleo box. He didn't mean to do it, of course—just ignorance and dumbness.

Nobody had kicked—apparently nobody had noticed it, and the grocer was in just that much more money.

Well, the temptation was too great—his new clerk's dumb trick made that grocer a confirmed oleo thief. I say confirmed because once a man gets in it he's in for good until he dies or goes to jail. I've seen a lot of 'em get soaked with a fine or two—it's only in the last year or two that they've been sending 'em to jail—and then try hard to get out. But the money came too easy—the first thing you knew they were working the game again in some stable.

And so on, over and over again, until—Biff, they were caught good and proper. Then the pen for theirs, and maybe this time real reformation, since they were jail birds and marked.

It's all rot, this glib gush the oleo men get off about oleo being a much abused product—the food of the poor—and so on. It's not abused at all! Ever since the first pound was brought out it's been tainted with fraud. Nobody's ever made any big fortune out of selling oleo honestly, but thousands have made big piles by using it to put up crooked deals with.

It's such a pity, for oleo with all the fake stripped off is a clean and decent thing. It's a pity, I say, that anything in itself so innocent should put people up to such crime.

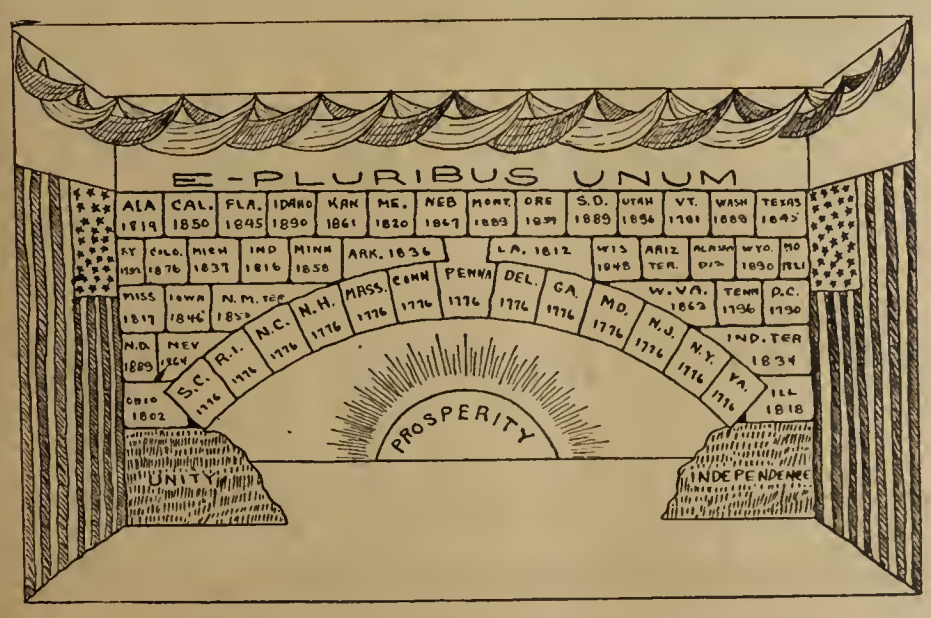
Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Coffee Window.

For this display cover the floor of your window with white paper (if the floor is high you will need a slightly slanting floor, which can be made of box lumber).

Next place a dummy bag of coffee flat on the floor in the centre of the background. Then place an open bag (with the top rolled back) over the first bag.



This can be full of coffee, or the mouth can be filled with a cardboard on which coffee is glued. Next spread a liberal quantity of coffee over the floor in a manner to give the appearance of having spilled out.

On this coffee outline the cartoon of Teddy with soup beans. This will not be as difficult as you think, as the lines do not have to be exact. In the front of the window place a sign reading something like this: Try our "Teddy Blend" Coffee at 20 cents.

Fourth of July Window.

This window requires some work, but not so much skill. The first thing to do is to get a strip of wood about ½-inch thick by 1½ inches wide and long enough to reach from one side of the window to the other and form the arch. The ends are nailed where the floor and walls join and some distance from the back of the window. Other strips can be nailed from this to the walls and ceiling.

Over this framework is tacked white paper, on which the "stones" are outlined with paint, then filled in with the States and dates. The bases or banks are green.

The ceiling and part way down the walls are covered with blue; either bunting, cheesecloth or wall paper can be used. The wall paper is the cheapest and does very well.

Cover the back of the window with sky blue; the sun is cut out of gilt paper and glued on the background even with the floor. Around the sun glue strips of gilt paper or mark them out with paint.

The floor is covered with light green. Around the top of the walls can be draped red and white cheesecloth over the blue. The side walls are covered with flags.

The window can be left this way or you can place a single row of bottled goods along the front, either straight or in a semi-circle.

AMONG THE TRADE.

In his report to the Camden Board of Health delivered during the week, Dr. Izard, Food and Drug Inspector, said he expected to watch closely all canned goods delivered in Camden, because he had learned of poisonous conditions. Developments are promised. Piffle!

The wholesale coffee firm of William Hill & Sons, 211 Dickinson street, Philadelphia, are about to go into bankruptcy. They are reported to be in a rather bad way. The concern has long been established as a coffee jobbing house, but wandered off into outside schemes, which greatly weakened their financial position. One of these was a lumber scheme and another was a chain of retail stores under the name of the Keystone Tea and Coffee Co. These outside projects have been heavy burdens and were the main cause of the failure.

Georgia peaches, mostly the variety known as Greensboro, are commanding $1.75 per crate. Many are green. Florida peaches riper and of better color, command $2.50. The demand is not large as yet.

A. L. HANWAY, Pres.

Detroit, Mich., Wholesalers.

The Wholesalers' Association of Detroit, Mich., has adopted the following resolutions against the proposed freight rate advance:—

Whereas, It is generally understood that the transportation companies in official classification territory contemplate an early advance in rates of freight of from 10 to 15 per cent., the total increase of which will run into many millions of dollars, which the public must pay; and

Whereas, For more than ten years past the railroads have gradually advanced rates by changing classifications or otherwise, which the shippers have not successfully opposed; and

Whereas, Practically every line of business has suffered in the depression of the past few months—manufacturers have closed their plants and labor lost its employment, and all losses of business and labor must be met by the parties directly interested; and

Whereas, In the face of the present depression in business it is now proposed to place an additional embargo upon the business of the country, without any consultation whatever with the shippers; and

Whereas, Any attempt to secure a reduction of freight rates by changing classifications or otherwise, has usually met with refusal, the railroads claiming protection of the courts upon the ground that it was unreasonable; and

Whereas, The time has come when the shippers feel that they are entitled to like protection in the courts against these proposed advances; now, therefore, be it

Resolved (1), That the Wholesalers' Association of Detroit most vigorously protests against such contemplated permanent action of the railroads, on the ground of its being absolutely unnecessary, ill-advised, unwarranted, untimely and a grievous and permanent burden upon the shippers and consumers of the country, subject to removal only through tedious and costly litigation on the part of the business interests.

(2) That this association co-operate with other commercial bodies, city, State and National, with a view of securing united action, checking the tendency upon the part of the railroads to levy a tax that is estimated to be equal to $1.75 per capita in the United States, or more than $9 per family.

(3) That copies of these resolutions be sent to the National Industrial Traffic Association at Chicago, Ill., Manufacturers' Association, Michigan Manufacturers' Association, National Manufacturers' Association now in session at New York, the Detroit Board of Commerce and other kindred organizations.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

Holding that the sale of meats or groceries is a work of necessity and comes within the exceptions provided in the law forbidding common labor on Sunday, Mayor Trumbull, of Pleasant Ridge, Ohio, last week dismissed five grocers arrested on the charge of violating the Sunday law and quashed affidavits against fifteen others.

The Retail Grocers' and Butchers' League of Cincinnati, which is fighting for an open Sunday, believes it won a signal victory in this decision against the recent Sunday-closing campaign urged by certain grocery interests under the name Retail Butchers' Association. George J. Schlichte, president of the league, said after the decision that he expected to see every grocery store in Cincinnati open each Sunday.

An Experience with Short Bookkeeping Systems.

Little Falls, N. J., May 22, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In reply to Bowman & Rowley's letter, would say that I have been using a (National) credit system for the past year and find it the biggest labor-saver that I have been able to find. I also find that it gives better satisfaction than the best bookkeeper. In taking orders I use a duplicate book, and after orders are laid out I figured both slips at the same time by using blue carbon. I send the customer one, and the other put in the system, so that customer by looking at last slip can tell if total is correct. When customer pays she is never dissatisfied, because when she got her goods each time, either in store or from wagon, she received her bill. When the customer had a book she would come in and say she did not get this or that. By credit system she knows she got the goods or could not have got the bill.

In regard to mistakes in bills, most customers have a certain time that they generally pay. That day I go over their accounts, and if any mistakes correct them, and when customer comes in ask her if she did not notice that mistake when she received her bill, but the mistakes are generally not very large. Another good thing about credit system is that when customers receive goods, boy, or whoever sells them, has to make up the bill at once, so it is sure to be charged. Where you have a day-book, and the boy is in a hurry, he thinks he can charge it in a few minutes and he sometimes never charges it, and if he does he probably forgets an item or two. I have a cash book and when account is paid mark it thus: $5 Mrs. G. Brown. And if I want to find out in regards to it I look in cash book. If you have a boy working for your interest he will not take a slip out of the system any quicker than a page from the ledger, and if he isn't working for your interest he will take your money before he would bother the system, and you had better change men.

If I had to take up the old system of bookkeeping again I would want to stop keeping store.

I am very much interested in the manufacturer fixing the retail price. The country community cannot get along without the small grocery store, and the storekeeper cannot exist in such community while the groceryman who buys in a little larger quantity is stabbing him in the back all the time. I wish you success in your movement.

Yours truly,
CHAS. J. WACK.

Thanks from the Great Western.

Chicago, Ill., May 21, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Permit us to express, through the "Grocery World," our sincere thanks and appreciation of the retail grocers of the country for the resolutions which were adopted by their delegates at the National convention recently held at Boston with regard to the approval of the policy of the manufacturer in seeking to show the grocer a living profit on his brands.

As you are aware, we have been waging a campaign since last fall along these very lines, which has been warmly supported by the retail grocers as individuals, and in many instances as associations; hence, we shall gladly follow any plan that is deemed more effective in the maintenance of a profitable minimum, which may be suggested by the committee appointed by the National convention to approach manufacturers on this subject and in line with the resolution to which we referred.

Yours truly,
THE GREAT WESTERN CEREAL CO.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

BOILED HAM.

The "boiled" ham that the average store sells isn't boiled. It goes through a process of steaming. Result—no flavor, uncooked and altogether undesirable. Ours is boiled in the old-fashioned way; that you all know. The boneless we will sell for 35 cents a pound. That with the bone in and which has been baked as well will be sliced at 40 cents a pound. The mere mention of "Cold Boiled Ham" at this season of the year means a sale. One, half-sliced, will be shown up on the grocery counter under a cheese glass nicely garnished.

COLD CANNED GOODS.

A woman returned a can of corned beef Saturday, all opened. It had been kept in a very warm place and was half mushy. She gave us fits for "selling such stuff." The contents were positively O. K., not the least sensation of a strong odor. Her "kick" gave us a thought. We're going to sell tongue, chicken, devilled goods, etc., from the refrigerator. You may say to your customer that the tongue you buy here today is "sold cold ready for slicing." You'll find it will prove a winning card. We'll advertise it, of course.

TEA TIME.

Iced tea is now in order. Ask her if she knows about the improved method of making this. You each have had a typewritten copy; now use it. You'll be asked which kind of tea should be used. Unquestionably a Ceylon or English Breakfast, yet for the family who has always used in the regular way a blended tea, it might be well to advise them to use the same iced. We have many times seen this demonstrated. To the average tea lover—the man or woman who truly enjoys tea flavor, recommend a fine English Breakfast. We're giving you merely our personal experience.

VACATION TIME

is here again. Lists are now being made up. The older employees will have the preference of half a dozen dates. After that you who came with us later will accept the dates prescribed by the firm.

Let us say to you at the beginning of this holiday time—make something of it. Whatever you do keep in the open, rain or shine. Forget the store. Live near to nature. Have a mental house cleaning. Try to realize the beauty of the flowers; the music of the brook; the grandeur of the stars. Dance and sing. Row and swim all you want, but don't miss the glory that is opened up to you in every phase of country life.

THINGS TO SUGGEST THESE DAYS.

Ginger ale, root beer, canned chicken and all the nicer kinds of canned meats; pudding preparations, prepared flour, peanut butter, Neufchatel cheese, jar cheese, soft shelled crabs, potato salad, baked beans by the pound, cooked beef, package crackers.

A Success from the Start.

We feel very grateful to our many friends in the trade for the manner they have taken hold of our new blend of coffee, Café des Gourmets. The sales up to date have exceeded our expectations, and we feel sure that as it becomes better known the sales will increase in even greater proportions, as the quality of the coffee is such as will commend it to most coffee drinkers. The package will also appeal both to you and your customers, being a handsomely labeled air-tight can. As we guarantee every pound of coffee that goes out of our place, so our Café des Gourmets is guaranteed and backed up by our ninety years' of fair business dealing. These Goods Are Already Sold Egg-O-See and E-C Corn have been more widely, more systematically and more continuously advertised to your customers than any flaked foods on the market. Everybody knows what they are. It requires no effort to sell them. Simply keep up your stock so you can fill your customers' orders, then they won't go somewhere else to get these popular products.

Don't Judge a Good Match by a Bad One

You may have seen some double-tip match that flew all to pieces, or smelt abominably, or softened up, or flamed up suddenly by spontaneous combustion.

The Ohio Blue Tip Safety Match has none of these troubles. If you strike it on the tip, and only on the tip, it will go off—always. But it will never soften, or go off at the wrong time, or do the wrong thing under any circumstances.

An independent, perfect match.

Business-Like Future Buying

More packers than ever are this year offering to give 100 per cent. delivery contracts to their customers on future canned goods. It was an inevitable reform; there never was any valid reason why they should not have been given.

We were almost the pioneers in this full delivery business on Blue Bell and Clover Farm canned goods, as fancy lines as are packed in all Maryland. If you will place your future orders for these, your jobber will sell them to you and guarantee to deliver 100 per cent.

Why not place your canned goods buying on a strict business basis?

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

CROFT & ALLEN CO. Philadelphia PENNSYLVANIA

They Look Alike But Aren't

At first glance all starches look alike, both Laundry and Corn Starches. There is really a heap of difference, though it takes use to bring it out. In other words, if you sell a poor Starch your customer will find it out before you will.

Take our word for it, no Starch has ever been quite so fine and good as Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch. With manufacturing improvements of our own, and a genius for the most painstaking care, we are producing goods we are proud of.

Does it commend itself to you that we are independent of any Trust?

Anker's Bouillon Capsules

SEE THEM MELT!

Put a package of these on your counter, with a little card telling what they're are good for, aud they'll melt away like snow. ANKER'S BOUILLON CAPSULES make bouillon, soup or beef tea, aud everybody likes one of the three, especially when they're so delicious as they are. Ten capsules in a box—drop one iu hot water. Good goods and a good profit.

"Price 25 Cents"

Our Moco-Mo Coffee, which retails at a quarter, will satisfy nine out of ten coffee drinkers as well as Mocha and Java. Many a much poorer coffee than Moco-Mo is sold every day as Mocha and Java.

As a matter of fact, nobody needs any better coffee than Moco-Mo. It is a perfect blend of high-grade coffees and is packed in a very unusual way, first hot from the roaster in a thick, tight-sealed bag, then the bag in a carton also sealed.

At a quarter Moco-Mo is a very profitable, smooth-selling proposition.

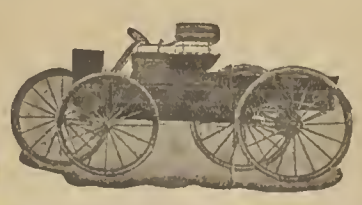
Do You Want to Make $300 More Every Year?

It is a mighty nice thing to be able to increase your profits by such a tidy sum as $300 a year on an investment of less than $20, but that is what you can do if you will put in an Acme Peanut Roaster (equipped for kerosene, gas or gasoline), the simplest and cheapest automatic roaster made. Anybody can operate it. There is nothing to get out of order and little or no expense in running it.



Give your customers a chance to buy freshly roasted peanuts and you will make from $1 to $3 a day. We would like to tell you more about it.

How Else Can You Deliver So Cheaply?

HERE is a clever, capable little automobile that you can use both for delivering goods and for pleasure. It has tremendous carrying power, easily carrying 1,500 pounds for 30 miles on fifteen cents' worth of gasolene. Is there any other delivery method one-tenth as cheap?

The Lindsley Car is the simplest, strongest-constructed, easiest-repaired and cheapest-operated business automobile made in the United States to-day. Is it good business to ignore it as a labor and money-saving device?

Do You Know What Ramly Stands For?

We'll tell you—the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. It is the one that is so widely imitated by our competitors.

If you want particular smokers to come to you, put the Ramly in stock.

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

Specialties Like This Boom Trade

Winorr Corn is canned corn in the sense that it is corn packed in a can, but it is not canned corn in the ordinary sense at all.

Canned corn means corn packed with the hulls on. Good, nevertheless? Yes until you taste Winorr, which is packed without the hulls.

Winorr Corn is a delicious specialty — just the tender, delicious, milky kernels of fancy sugar corn.

You can sell it just as surely as thousands of other grocers do.

On Your Shelves For Years

¶ Old goods are like old friends — you have a warmer feeling for them than you have for strangers.

¶ Take Babbitt's Best Soap. For years it's been the standard laundry soap of the country.

For years, probably, it has stared back at you from your shelves until you and your customers both have come to consider it as much of a fixture as your scales.

¶ Don't be tempted to displace it by any get-rich-quick soap. Stick to tried and true friends. Babbitt's Best Soap has always paid you a good profit; hasn't it earned your good will?

Made by

B. T. Babbitt

"The Can's the Thing"

¶ When we arranged to put out our Café des Gourmets Coffee we concluded that it must be put up in an air-tight package, so we decided that "the can's the thing" that would accomplish our purpose, so it is packed in handsomely labeled one-pound cans that not only protects the natural flavor and freshness, but keeps it so for an indefinite time.

¶ It is as near a perfect blend as our many years of experience could make and our usual guarantee goes with it.

¶ Sold to you at 25 cents a pound.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

REGARDLESS

of your requirements we want your coupon book business. Makes no difference whether you want few or many. We are greatly pleased with the large number of new people, who in 1907, began using our

and have apparently settled down to their continuous use. The convenience of the INDEX appeals to them.

100,000 MORE BOOKS SOLD IN 1907 THAN 1906

Write for free samples and then send in an order. They do not cost much and after you learn their merits you will be glad to use them through 1908 and as much longer as you are in business.

A Household Word

If you were to say to any woman who came into your store, "What is Ariosa?" She would answer instantly, "Why that's Arbuckles' Coffee." Why? There is only ONE answer. It is the best package coffee ever sold at the price, and it is the most extensively advertised. Ariosa is a product you don't have to sell, you simply put it in stock and take orders for it.

A Fixture You Need

Our Five-jar Fixture, one of the useful and ornamental fixtures you can have. Made in both oak and cherry, 3-coat finish. No old style hinges; but the lids lift and spring to right, thus completely exposing the contents.

Occupies no more room than a 4-jar fixture, is a silent salesman, and helps to make a grocer proud of his store. All trimmings nickeled.

Will You Use Our Ad=writer?

One of the best ad-writers in the country has written for us a series of advertisements intended to be used by retail grocers, either in their local newspapers, or in circulars or folders.

All exploit Armour's Simon-pure Leaf Lard, a pure, rich, leaf lard refined in open kettles—in the good old-fashioned way.

If you think this is a scheme to get you to advertise our goods at your expense—let us reason with you a minute:—

Simon-pure Leaf Lard is a superlatively fine article. No lard can be better, none more fully satisfy your customers or yield a fairer profit.

If it is a good thing for you to sell, it is a good thing for you to advertise, The advertisements we will furnish you are gems of their class. You can unquestionably get results from them, for they will give the signal where to get Simon-pure Leaf Lard to hundreds of people who have seen our advertisements in the magazines.

Will you write?

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

Positively The Best Wagon Ever Built For the Grocery Trade

Strong, Easy-Running, Finest Steel Tires, Wheels Second-Growth Hickory

This wagon is exceedingly handsome and almost everlasting. There are more "J. M." wagons in use in Philadelphia than all other makes combined. We have a number of them ready for your name and colors.

Tell us your ideas of a wagon, we will send you a catalogue in which you will find something very much like it. If it isn't there, we will build it for you.

FULTON & WALKER CO. TWENTIETH and FILBERT STS. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"Show All—Sell All"

This is the idea of a store like this. Notice that everything is where customers can see it. These bins protect you from loss by dust, dirt or bugs. A bin full of sugar shows it is sugar, makes people want sugar, and keeps every grain of sugar in clean, salable condition. Let us make an estimate for you.

DOLLARS IN RETAILERS' POCKETS

Hundreds of Manufacturers and Jobbers of High-grade Standard Selling Goods are offering

UNIVERSAL COUPON CERTIFICATES TO RETAIL DEALERS

as an inducement to push the sales of their goods to consumers. These certificates are given at no increase in the selling prices, or cheapening of quality in their products, but are intended solely as a compensation for your assistance, and are exchangeable through us for valuable and useful merchandise, of which the following ist represents a few of the

1000 ARTICLES TO CHOOSE FROM

Pianos	Harness	Buggies	Silverware	Typewriters	Scales	Lamps
Coffee Mills	Safes	Leather Goods	Strong Boxes	Wagons	Trucks
Desks	Tools	Chinaware	Jewelry	Furniture	Sporting Goods
Rubber Goods	Watches	Cut Glass	Toilet Articles	Trunks	Rugs	Clocks

Any retailer taking advantage of this liberal offer is simply putting extra dollars into his pocket, as the cost to him is absolutely nothing but represents a saving of 15 to 60 per cent. over the cost if he were to buy them in the regular retail way.

Handsome Presents Go With It

ROYAL PEANUT BUTTER is the kind that brings it—Universal Coupons, which you can exchange for almost anything you want. In addition to this it is the most carefully prepared product of its kind ever made. The man and the monkey are both animals, but there is a mighty difference between them. There is just as much difference between Royal and ordinary peanut butter. Your customers will tell you so if you get them to try Royal Peanut Butter.

Who Thinks For You?

You do it yourself, don't you? Did you wait for others to select your store and your stock, and tell you how to run your business?

If our advertising sent people to demand that you sell our Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels would you feel pleasant?

But, think this over. You can depend on our goods and know their fine quality will increase your trade.

You can make a good profit on them and every case brings you Universal Coupons which are good as cash in buying almost anything you want.

We work with you, not against you. Will you push our goods?

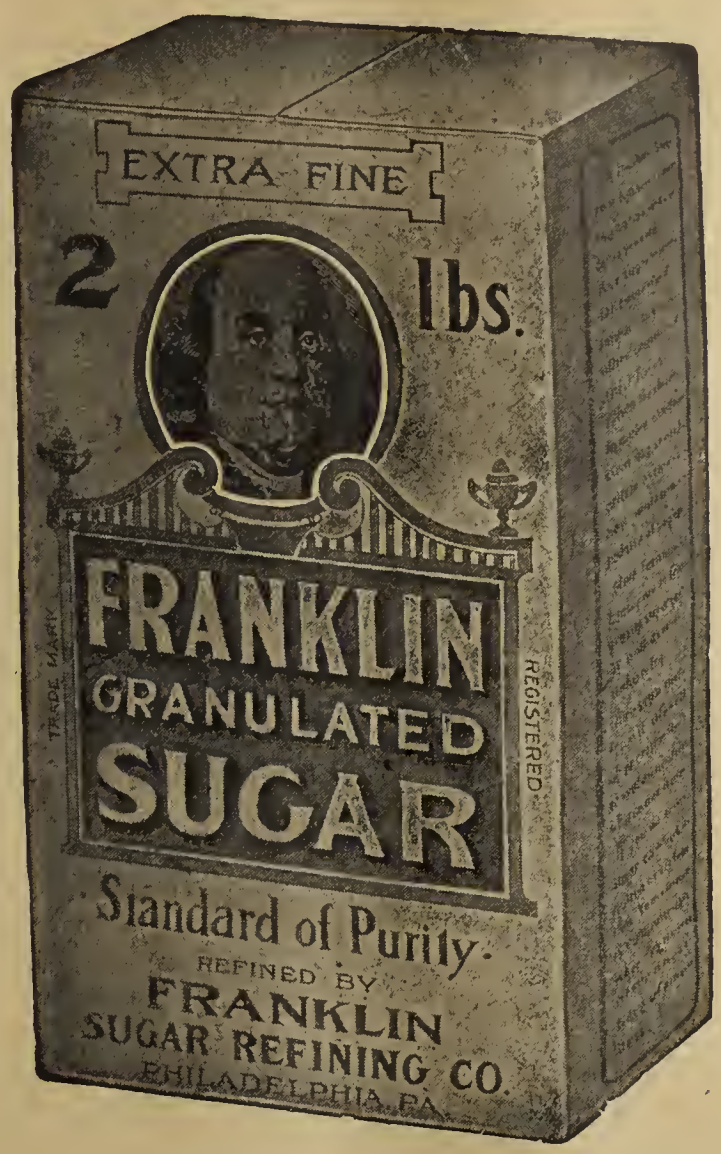
The Value of Magazine Advertising



Many a person persuaded by magazine advertising to try SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAM doesn't do it simply because she doesn't know where to buy it.

It would pay you to keep a sign in your window all the time—"We Keep SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS."

Your sign will surely strike somebody just after she saw our magazine advertisement, and a sale is just as sure as fate.

Not one sale, but many, for PREMIUM HAM is just as fine one time as another.

Swift & Company, U. S. A.

Sugar's Share in the Big Fruit Crops

¶ Unless all signs fail we are going to have very large crops of all fruits this year.

¶ That means lots of preserving and a big demand for sugar.

¶ As a rule grocers don't look forward with much interest to a "big demand for sugar," because it means increased work at no profit.

¶ What shall it profit a man if he sells a hundred barrels of sugar and gets back only what he paid for it?

¶ Sell Franklin Carton Sugar instead of bulk sugar and your views will change, for there is no work required in selling Franklin Carton Sugar. You don't even need to wrap it. And there is a good profit, and what there is you can't waste through the overweight—"good measure"—that always goes with sugar in bulk.

Plan to Push Brazil Coffee is Begun

Will be First Tried in England, and a Company to Exploit It has been Formed. Will Advertise Several Standard Grades, Green and Roasted, Under Trademark to be Owned by Government. Sale Price to be Low in Order to Interest Working Classes.

In a recent issue the "Grocery World" reported in detail the project of the coffee growers of the State of Sao Paulo, Brazil, to increase the sale of Brazil coffee by advertising through the United States and other countries, and by extensive propaganda of other kinds. That the plan was not mere talk is indicated by some information obtained during the week.

As stated, the coffee growers intend to carry their campaign into practically all the leading coffee drinking countries of the world. The beginning will be made in England; in fact it has already been made there, and since the plans adopted are expected to be carried out everywhere, a brief description of them will be interesting.

A contract has already been signed between the Government of the State of Sao Paulo and two London firms whereby the latter are to undertake a propaganda for the use of Sao Paulo coffee in the United Kingdom covering five years and the Government of the State is to pay the firms for that purpose a subsidy covering five years, amounting in all to $250,000, and to grant to them certain privileges of trade value which practically increases this subsidy. By the terms of the contract the two firms undertake to form a company in England with a capital of £52,500 ($255,491), covering 50,000 preference shares of £1 each and 50,000 ordinary shares of 1 shilling each; 5,000 preference shares are to be sold to Sao Paulo planters and the rest divided between the two firms, such shares to have preference in dividends up to 7 per cent. per annum and in the capital.

This company is to push Sao Paulo coffee in Great Britain, and after two years the campaign may be extended to all British colonies and Egypt. It is to place on the market two grades of Brazilian coffee, one a well-roasted grade of American types 3, 4 and 5 more or less, and the other types 7 and 8 more or less. The coffee is to be sold to the public at the lowest possible rate so as to interest the working classes. The sale price shall be fixed by the company. The goods are to be sold under trade-marks which are to be controlled by the Government, which also will control the quality of the coffee sold. The trade-marks are to be the property of the Government until the end of the five years, after which they will belong to the selling company, which will at that time assume responsibility for the quality of the goods sold. The coffee shall be sold either green or roasted and the packages shall bear the stamp of the Government, and the company shall have the right during the continuance of the contract to style itself the "Official Agent of the State of Sao Paulo."

Coffee men who know how the enormous overproduction of Rio and Santos coffee has reduced prices and destroyed the profit in the business at first thought that the industry's only salvation laid in reducing production, and various plans to produce that result were vainly tried. These authorities now seem to have changed their views. They now think that the way to lift the industry from its slough of despond is to open up new channels of consumption by advertising it and pushing it as indicated above.

Many persons familiar with what has been accomplished in the United States by advertisers handling substitutes for coffee believe that an active advertising campaign in the United States would solve many of the present troubles. The Sao Paulo Government has believed that with proper advertising and presentation of their product the people of Great Britain as a mass will use as much coffee as the people of the United States. The contract signed is based upon their belief.

More Blows for "Business Men's Association of Pennsylvania"

State Secretary Circulates Portion of Vigorous Article from "Raftsman's Journal." Claims that Collection of Money is the Main End. What Mutual Fire Insurance has Saved Pennsylvania Retailers.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., June 4, 1908.

The "Raftsman's Journal" contains a warm blast against the workings of the "Business Men's Association of Pennsylvania," whose sole object is the repeal of the mercantile tax law of the State. A part of the article is as follows:—

> The whole object and purpose of this organization is the collection of $1 from every man who pays a mercantile tax. The glib-tongued representatives of this organization present no formula or no plan for the repeal of a statute that has been on the books for seventy-eight years. If the merchants who are solicited by these travelers ask them to define the term "Mercantile Tax," they could not do it. If the merchant solicited to contribute should "quiz" them as to how much money went from the merchants of the State to the public treasury, they could not answer. If the merchant solicited to contribute would ask these solicitors the method by which this great (?) organization proposed to repeal the law on the statute books, their answer would be, "backheesh"—meaning, give us money.

Five years' experience has demonstrated successfully the wisdom of those who established the Co-operative Mutual Fire Insurance Co. During this time 6,300 policies have been issued, and insurance written aggregating $8,507,273. Two or three changes have been made in the plans of the company, where the plans were shown to be capable of improvement. During the first six months a cash premium of 40 per cent. of standard rates was collected, and a premium note of 1 per cent. of the hazard, regardless of the rate under which application was written, was taken. It was at first intended to levy frequent assessments, but becoming satisfied that frequent assessments would be expensive in collection and tend to shake the confidence of the members of the company, at the beginning of 1904 the cash premium was changed from 40 to 50 per cent. of standard rates, and the premium note was changed to five times the cash premium and later to fifteen times the cash premium, when it was found that the substantial mutual companies had a premium note reserve of about 10 per cent. of the hazard. On May 1, 1908, the company had $2,291,948.16 insurance in force, with not more than $3,000 in any one risk, or over $9,000 within one quarter square. The company had accumulated a surplus of $7,748.05, and had a premium note reserve of $215,046.16. Nearly all of the resources of the company are either cash in bank or interest bearing certificates of deposit in national banks.

During these five years co-operative fire insurance has saved the retail merchants of Pennsylvania $50,192.23 in comparison with standard old line rates, or 45 per cent. A great many members of our association save more than the cost of their entire dues in the local association, although the dues range from 25 cents per year at Waterford, Pa., to $48 per year at Butler, Pa. P. M. Malloy, of Williamsport, has probably carried more insurance in the company than any other single policy holder, and his individual savings during five years have been $334.70. Philadelphia grocers have the largest list of policy holders, but have not saved as much as some other towns, owing to the low rates of insurance charged on grocery stocks in Philadelphia, where the business has been profitable to the company. Erie merchants are second in amount of business written, and first in amount saved, their experience to April 30, 1908, showing a saving of $7,221.01. In five years but one assessment was levied, which was made two years ago and was for 3 per cent. on the premium note reserve. Those policy holders subject to this assessment, after paying it, still saved 27½ per cent. of standard rates. The savings of the company have ranged from 27½ to 60 per cent. of former old line cost.

As the company becomes older its management is becoming more conservative with experience. Although privileged to accept $3,000 on single risks, the management have learned that mutual insurance limiting itself to conservative risks becomes safely available to a larger number of policy holders, and is operated at a cost considerably less than where larger risks are taken. The average at risk on the 1902 policies in force on January 1, 1908, was $1,302.

The business of the company is limited to members in good standing in the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania within the fire protected limits. Insurance is accepted on buildings occupied for mercantile and dwelling purposes, or their contents, such as mercantile stocks and household goods. Manufactories, mills, carpenter shops, lumber yards, boiler houses, taverns and garages are prohibited risks. The president of each eligible association appoints the local agent, who is usually the secretary, and a local Insurance Committee, which superintends the local field and directs the agent in his work subject to the supervision and direction of the State Board of Directors. All of the directors are policy holders in the company. After the first year the local committee is invariably selected from among the policy holders.

A. M. Howes,
State Secretary.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XLI.—How to Boost Competitors.

If you wish to advertise your competitor speak slightingly of him.

The human being is a queer animal, and has some queer ideas. Most of them will take privileges themselves that they will not accord unto others. For instance, your customer can come into your store and tell you all kinds of mean tricks your competitor has been playing, also all kinds of prices he has been making, and you know that at least half what he tells you is not true, but at the same time if you say something to that same customer about that same competitor the customer will begin to feel resentment because you tell him things about a man behind his back, and nine chances out of ten he will think to himself that the other fellow would not say that about you, even if it was true.

If this customer, who is himself willing to talk about your competitor, resents your saying anything about him, think how the customer who never says anything about your competitor is likely to feel if you tried to tell him something about that business rival which did not happen to be creditable.

The best way of showing up the bad points of a competitor, if he has any, is to let his customers do all the talking, even though you may be told that same competitor has made uncomplimentary remarks about you.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Some of the small independent jar manufacturers have been reaping a fine harvest by selling at 50 cents a gross below the combine prices. All who have done that have practically sold their entire output.

Creditors have filed a petition in the United States District Court to have the Keystone Tea and Coffee Co., of this city, adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The names of the petitioning creditors and the amounts of their claims are: S. H. Levin's Sons, $343.30; Tarentum Glass Co., $162.31; J. Stromeyer & Co., $35.10. This is the concern backed by William Hill & Sons.

National Wholesale Grocers' Association in Convention

Hold Fourth Annual Meeting at Atlantic City. Reports of Committees Show Prosperous Year. Various Reports of Officers. Extracts from Addresses.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Atlantic City, N. J.,
June 5, 1908.

The largest of the four annual conventions of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association opened at this city on Wednesday last, at its headquarters in the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel. The attendance is about 500. In addition to members of the National Jobbers' Association, there were also present representatives of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, the National Retail Grocers' Association, the National Association of Canned Goods and Dried Fruit Brokers, the National Canners' Association, and the Association of Manufacturers' Representatives.

Following the usual preliminaries such as prayer, address of welcome by the Mayor of Atlantic City and the response by F. W. Hannahs, first vice-president of the association, President Judson named the following committees:

Committee on Resolutions, McConnoughey, West Virginia, chairman; C. M. Carr, California; A. S. Oakford, Illinois; F. B. Milliken, Portland, Me.; J. F. Kelly, St. Paul, Minn. Committee of Credentials, A. M. Wilson, Connecticut; G. W. Rouse, Michigan; B. F. Pierson, Indiana; E. F. Brewster, New York; Henry M. Hayes, Wisconsin; Chas. Y. Fox, Philadelphia. Audit of Treasurer's Accounts, E. B. Hosier, New York; J. L. Brady, Nebraska; F. L. Evans, Ohio. Press, W. N. Todd, Kansas; Frank A. Potter, New York; A. C. Buttolf, Illinois.

On Wednesday morning G. Waldo Smith, a well-known jobber of New York City, delivered a reminiscent address, touching on various trade questions. A few extracts follow:—

I recall a document I once issued under the title, "The Manufacturers' Articles of Faith," in which I pointed out three ways by which a manufacturer might market his output in a city like New York—he might deal with the consumer direct and reach 200,000 people, a plan entirely legitimate, but involving an almost impossible distributive plant; he might sell through 3,000 retailers and reach a million people, but it would be at a cost for a distributing plant entirely beyond reason, but if he would market his goods through the 40 jobbers, all would be reached and at a minimum of cost. But in the latter plan a manufacturer should see to it that the jobber is well paid for the immense work he performs.

* * * * * * * *

I strongly advocate the "flat price" plan—a definite price for one box, 100 boxes or 1,000 boxes, in which big or little dealers, retailers or wholesalers, might buy direct, but on which the jobber should be paid a commission on the sales he had made during a fixed period. I declare my firm belief that such a plan was fair and legal and that no law could interfere with it, if honestly practiced. It is the jobber's right to handle only such goods as pay him a profit and it is equally his right to demand protection from the manufacturer from ruinous price cutters. On such a plan the interests of manufacturer, jobber and retailer would be alike subserved and prosperity and harmony secured.

The reports of the officers were presented during the afternoon of the same day. The treasurer, Frank A. Potter, showed a present balance of $3,980.67.

The report of the president, William Judson, was quite lengthy, and contained the following interesting paragraphs:—

* * * * * * * *

The negotiations of our association, through our several committees, with the producers and manufacturers of the country, have given us a better conception of the impelling motives that govern manufacturers in their dealings with us. Through this means we have found that manufacturers and transportation companies, however large and influential, are as much creatures of circumstances as we are, and that their policies are dictated by the fiat of inexorable conditions as they exist and not by mere whim, avarice or arrogance, as is sometimes thoughtlessly and unjustly supposed to be the case.

* * * * * * * *

In this connection I want to emphasize as strongly as I can one vitally important duty; that is, when, through one of our committees, we enter into an agreement with a manufacturer or transportation company that every member of our association take a personal interest in carrying out our part of the agreement as faithfully as though it were a financial obligation. In fact, the faithful and energetic discharge of agreements and obligations will be the measure of our success, our prestige and our usefulness.

It was my privilege at our last annual meeting to call attention to the vast amount of gratuitous work done by the jobber in handling staple commodities without profit. It is a preposterous proposition. By so doing we rob ourselves of profits to which we are entitled, minimize our importance, cheapen in the eyes of the public the service we render and lower the standard of commercial dignity. But we are waking up to our shortcomings as well as our opportunities. If I mistake not, the death knell of profitless business will soon be sounded. Jobbers are not only getting tired of doing a large volume of business for nothing, but they are getting ashamed of it as well. The whole category of confusion, subterfuge and misrepresentation which grows out of this practice will disappear with its abandonment, and the whole fabric of the grocery business, both wholesale and retail, will be lifted to a higher ethical plane and placed on a more stable and profitable basis.

The report of the secretary, Alfred H. Beckmann, was in part as follows:—

Of pure food legislation our members have been fully advised through your secretary's office, through the following circulars:—

July 8, 1907, "Meat Inspection," F. I. D., 74; July 17, "Meat Inspection," F. I. D., 75; July 23, "Preservatives," F. I. D., 76; July 23, "Conference State and National Food Laws Dept."; July 29, "Meat Inspection"; August 2, Food Laws, "Digest of State Food Laws"; August 16, "Labels on Hand"; September 6, "Extension of Time on Labels"; September 27, F. D., 78-79; November 8, "Rulings," F. I. D., 80-81; December 10, "Guaranties," F. I. D., 82-83; January 28, 1908, "Uniform Laws";; February 24, "Food Rulings," F. I. D., 84-85-86-87; March 9, "Rulings on Private Importations, etc.," F. I. D., 88-89; March 12, "Corrections in State Food Laws"; April 2, "Amending Sherman Anti-Trust Law," copy Hepburn Bill; April 12, "Legislation in New England"; April 28, "Labeling Medicinal Mixtures," F. I. D., 90; "Labeling Mocha Coffee," F. I. D., 91; May 27, "Rulings," F. I. D., 92-93-94-95-96; Judgment No. 1.

Again, we have demonstrated to the manufacturer, by fair dealing and an appreciation of mutual interests, the advisability and economy in recognizing legitimate channels of distribution; and,

Further, in behalf of the wholesale grocer, we have been instrumental in obtaining from some manufacturers more reasonable compensation, commensurate with the increased cost of distribution of proprietary articles as indicated by special circulars mailed to members.

The subsidizing of jobbers' salesmen by manufacturers has in the main been discontinued through the influence of this asociation. It would seem in order that this convention go on record as disapproving totally the subsidizing of jobbers' salesmen by manufacturers and that each individual jobber insist upon same being discontinued. There is no more objectionable feature in the grocery business. We cannot expect one manufacturer to discontinue a practice while it is tolerated from others.

Our membership comprises jobbers in thirty-five States, three States having been added this year. We have fifty-three new members. Seventeen members withdrew on account of retiring from business and one branch house has discontinued its membership. Only seven of our former members have resigned.

Our present membership is divided as follows: Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 2; California, 20; Colorado, 14; Conecticut, 14; Delaware, 1; Florida, 1; Illinois, 51; Indiana, 19; Indian Territory, 3; Kentucky, 9; Louisiana, 5; Maine, 9; Maryland,1; Massachusetts,35; Michigan, 14; Minnesota, 20; Missouri, 33; Nebraska, 15; New Hampshire, 7; New Jersey, 4; New Mexico, 1; New York, 60; North Dakota, 2; Ohio, 31; Oklahoma, 3; Oregon, 5; Pennsylvania, 54; Rhode Island, 5; Vermont, 5; Washington, 9; West Virginia, 8; Wisconsin, 8; total, 517.

The general counsel, W. C. Breed, also rendered a report, in part as follows:—

At the request of your officers and the Bill of Lading Committee, counsel appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington in October, 1907. Your counsel urged the adoption by the commission of a bill of lading the provisions of which should be uniform and the use of which should be required by railroads throughout the United States.

* * * * * * * *

Counsel attended the convention of the National and Retail Grocers' Association in Boston during May, 1908, and enlisted the support of that organization against legislation requiring the dating and classifying of food products. It is to be hoped that the jobber and retailer, through their respective associations, may be brought into closer harmony and to a better realization of the rights of each branch of the trade.

* * * * * * * *

For two years Senator Beveridge has been urging on the Senate of the United States the passage of a measure requiring the dating of meat food products. At present no State and no foreign country has such a law; it is not required for the protection of the public health; it would accomplish no good purpose, and it would be most disastrous to retailer, jobber and manufacturer. Dating measures, however, seem to be popular. They sound attractive, and during the past year they have been proposed in several State Legislatures.

During the next year Congress and thirty-nine State Legislatures will convene. Already many food commissioners, in department reports, have announced their intention of seeking the enactment of laws, amending existing food laws and requiring that dates, weights and measures and percentages of ingredients be declared upon packages. The rights of dealers, as opposed to the demands of technical food commissioners, will, or should be, fought out. This can best be done along the lines in which this association has been operating during the past year and not by engaging in fruitless and extended litigation after the enactment of such provisions into law.

On Thursday much important business was transacted. One of the most notable features was the rendering of the report of the Manufacturers' Committee, consisting of T. W. Hannahs, F. F. Whitmarsh and W. N. Todd, which was as follows:—

Your committee have had several meetings upon various occasions since appointment and have very generally brought the matter to the

Monday, June 8, 1908.

Not long ago the "Grocery World" discussed the roseate promises of the local Wholesale Grocers' Association to manufacturers whom they hoped to induce to cut off the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and the chain stores—that if the manufacturers would agree to sell jobbers exclusively, they, the jobbers, would push such manufacturers' goods to the exclusion of the goods of manufacturers who did not. In the course of that discussion the "Grocery World" expressed the opinion that the jobbers would probably keep their promises—for a while.

The Jobbers' Piecrust Promises.

An incident was related to the writer during the week which proves that the jobbers sometimes, at least, do not even begin to keep their promises. A certain large manufacturer had been selling one of the large Eastern cooperative buying organizations of retailers. The jobbers in that territory became very restive and prevailed upon him to cut the retailers' organization off the direct buying list, promising that if he did they would do all sorts of things for his goods.

The manufacturer listened to the voices that preached injustice and cut the association off. Did the jobbers put forth the slightest effort to compensate him for his sacrifice of a good customer in their behalf? The manufacturer himself is authority for the statement that they did absolutely nothing—apparently never made the slightest effort to.

Will that manufacturer listen to any more of the jobbers' tales as to the fine things they will do for him if he gives all his business to them?

The National's Oleo Resolutions.

Some of the "Grocery World's" esteemed contemporaries do not agree with this journal's opinion that the National Association of Retail Grocers erred when it adopted a resolution antagonistic to the Federal oleo tax. The adverse comments emanate from the sections where the oleo industry flourishes, and while unquestionably sincere are necessarily warped by that fact. The "Interstate Grocer" expresses itself as follows:—

> Editor Buckley, of the "Grocery World," who usually knows what he is talking about, goes way wrong in criticising the National Association for asking the repeal of the 10-cent tax on colored oleomargarine. The present tax is admitted by every revenue officer in the Government service as putting a premium on crime which many persons are not able to pass by.

The following is from "Trade," of Detroit, Mich.:—

> The "Grocery World" is generally on the right side of every question pertaining to the manufacture of food products, but in this case we believe it does not look at the matter in the proper light. It says there has been less fraud in the sale of oleomargarine since the passage of the Federal law, than ever before in the history of the business.
> Granted that such is the case and while not admitting that there is any justification in deception in the sale of oleo, the people of the country are injured to a greater extent by being compelled to pay the enormous prices for butter as a result of the elimination of the competition of butterine, than would be the case if eleomargarine were sold for butter.
> Let us have fair play in this matter.

If the high oleo tax did, as "Trade" asserts, compel people to pay the high price for butter, or to buy butter at all, then its position might be sound, and the "Grocery World" would feel like changing its views. Such, however, is not the case. The Federal tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleo robs the people of not one of their former ways of escape from high-priced butter. If pure butter gets too high, the people can still eat oleo, if they want to. The tax doesn't stop them in the least. It doesn't even put an obstacle in their path, for as a matter of fact, white oleo can be sold cheaper to-day than ever before. Even yellow oleo, after it pays the 10-cent tax, can always be sold far below butter. The "Interstate Grocer" says the oleo tax "injures the people by compelling them to pay the enormous prices for butter as a result of the elimination of the competition of butterine," but how can this be so when the competition is not eliminated?

The "Interstate Grocer's" suggestion that the tax law should be repealed because it puts a premium on crime is decidedly novel from the standpoint of criminology. If law is ever a deterrent, it seems reasonable to expect that the severer it is the more of a deterrent it will become. Naturally the more thoroughly any law squeezes the illicit profits out of a business the more incentive malefactors will have to violate it. But that, instead of proving it a bad law, simply makes stronger and more convincing the revelation of its great need.

The Macy Sale of Toasted Corn Flakes.

The Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes Co. has been compelled to take legal notice of the sale by Macy & Co., the New York department storekeepers, of its toasted corn flakes at 6 cents, a price 1 7-9 cents below the average wholesale cost. The company now gives out that it is consulting a lawyer with a view to stopping the cut price if it can. Meanwhile Macy & Co. continue to sell at 6 cents and the regular retail trade of New York City continues to be demoralized.

When some dealer cuts their price it is a favorite excuse with manufacturers that "we can do nothing. The cutter doesn't buy from us—he buys through some jobber. We have no relations and no contract with him, and we therefore can't do anything with him." Seventy-five per cent. of the price cutting which so demoralizes the market comes from manufacturers' indifference. Assured of their own sales and their own profit many of them care nothing whether the dealer gets anything or not.

There is scarcely any question that the Kellogg people, if they honestly want to, can enjoin Macy & Co. from selling their corn flakes at 6 cents. Not on the ground of violated contract, for there is no contract, but on the broad ground of equity, the application of which in this case is that no man should be allowed to wantonly destroy another's business. Neither Macy & Co. nor any one else can sell Kellogg's corn flakes at 6 cents and avoid making a loss. For one dealer as large as Macy & Co. and as heavy an advedtiser, to offer it at 6 cents means demoralization to much of the New York trade—a punishment which no manufacturer is compelled to stand.

Kellogg & Co. may be bluffing in their talk of lawsuit and they may not. We shall see.

The Coffee-Pushing Scheme.

When the Brazil coffee growers bring to this country the plans to boom Brazil coffee which they are about to launch in England, and which are set forth in another column, they will strike somewhat of a snag. In a nutshell, the plan comprehends the exploiting of two standard grades of Rio or Santos coffee, fixing the price at the lowest possible notch "in order to catch the working man." This may go in England, which is not a coffee country. But in America any attempt to sell coffee "at the lowest possible notch" would instantly antagonize not only large package coffee firms like Arbuckle Bros. and the Woolson Spice Co., but almost every retailer in business, for the grades the growers have picked out to push are sold by nearly all stores.

The plan in the abstract is thoroughly good, but if, the coffee growers antagonize the great grocery distributing interests they will lose more than they gain.

Chain Store's Advent in New Orleans.

Duke C. Bowers, the chain-store grocer of Memphis, will soon open a similar line of establishments in New Orleans. Information now comes from New Orleans to the effect that Bowers has already leased a store in New Orleans and will open the first week in August. The first of the New Orleans stores is expected to be followed by twenty-four more run on the cash basis which is the foundation of Mr. Bowers' plan.

As to Substitution

Touching jobbers as substitutors.

Also touching some reasons for substitution and the manufacturers' fixing of the price as a prevention of substitution.

The past year has witnessed some heavy firing through the magazines and elsewhere at retail dealers who substitute.

Manufacturers have come to realize at last what they have never realized—or at least would never admit—before, that a representative retail merchant can sell almost any good thing he wants to, and that the manufacturer, in his efforts to compel him to sell a brand against his will, has been butting his head against a stone wall.

This campaign to force retailers to sell what is called for, no matter how unprofitable, and to refrain from striving to persuade customers over to something which pays a decent profit, is now of very wide extent. The magazines are carrying page advertisements in its interest, and catch lines and mottoes are being thrust into consumers' mouths like "Thank you, I want what I asked for; good day."

Isn't it odd that through all this campaign the sole object of attack is the retail dealer?

Not a word, not an insinuation, against the wholesaler, who not only substitutes five times to the retailer's once, but has just twice the reason for doing it.

The average retailer has no private brands—he isn't large enough. When he substitutes against a proprietary brand he does so in favor of another proprietary brand, which comprehends, to his mind, better reasons for selling.

On the contrary, there is hardly a jobber but who does have brands of his own. So that he has a double reason for his substituting—1, making the better profit that substituting often permits him to make; and 2, getting his own brand established.

Jobbers will tell you frankly that they get their own brands in wherever they can. And getting them in certainly means getting proprietary brands out. Isn't that substitution? Yet who ever sees any manufacturer delivering diatribes against the jobbers' substituting?

Don't think I criticise a jobber for working for his own brands and against proprietary brands. Profit he must have if he lives, and profit he can't make on a great many of the proprietary brands he is expected to sell today.

Often that is the manufacturer's fault, sometimes it is not.

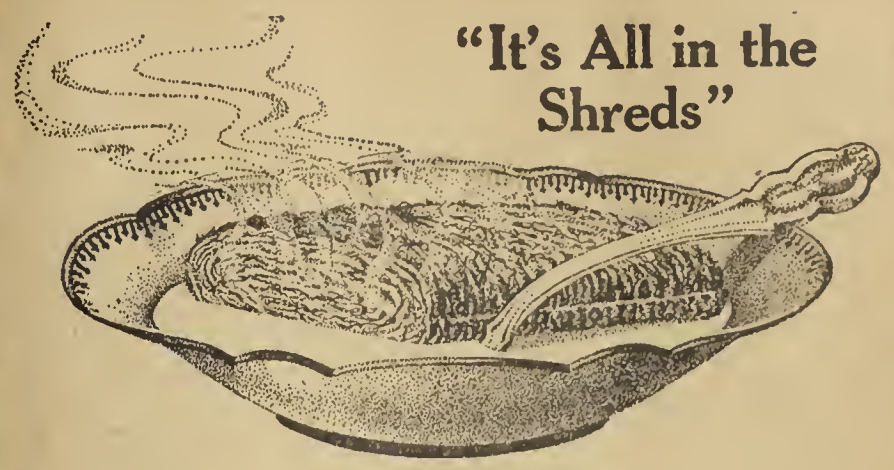
Naturally the reason for almost every case of substitution is the fact that the article substituted against pays an inadequate profit. That I charge to the manufacturer, because he has a right under the law to compel the jobber, and even the retailer, to sell at a figure which he, the manufacturer, fixes.

Take Paris corn. It costs the jobber 90 cents; some are reselling to the retailer at 92½ cents. Is it any wonder that jobbers who have private brands of Maine corn are striving tooth and nail to get them in and Paris out?

The Paris corn people could very largely cure the trouble by making it quite or almost as profitable for a jobber to sell Paris corn as to sell his own brand.

Several jobbers in this section are having packed as their own private brand a grade of Maine corn which corresponds exactly with a certain well-known advertised proprietary brand. As a matter of fact, it is the same thing, since it is packed by the same packer from the same stock. The only difference is the label.

The advertised brand sells to the retailer at 95 cents to $1. The private brands sell all the way from $1.05 to $1.20.



Who says the jobber hasn't a good and sufficient reason for substitution here?

Exactly the same condition exists in numberless other things.

Exactly the same condition exists in the retail field.

As long as the manufacturer treats with indifference the wholesale and retail price at which his goods are sold, permitting that price to become cut both wholesale and retail, so long will wholesalers and retailers, in order to escape business suicide, work to sell substitutes.

And utter fools they would be if they didn't.

A certain manufacturer gave a leading jobbing house control of a brand of goods for the Philadelphia market. It was and it was not a private brand—the jobber controlled it, but the packer's name appeared on it, and its name was the name the packer gave it.

The jobber worked on this brand and built up a good trade. Gradually the price, by way of taking advantage of this, advanced. Finally it got too high, and the jobber refused to buy. The manufacturer then sold the goods to a cut-price jobbing house, who at once set about destroying the other jobber's trade on that brand by offering it at 10 cents below the established price.

In another case a similar arrangement was made between other parties. Here the jobber found that he was being charged 10 to 15 cents more per dozen for the brand he was given control of than for goods of exactly the same quality under other labels.

Incidents like this furnish other reasons why jobbers, in self-defense, must have their own brands and must substitute with them.

In a nutshell, because the manufacturer does not sufficiently stand behind the trade, either on price or other things.

Would the trouble be cured if the manufacturer limited the selling price of his brand? I think very largely it would. Suppose the packers of Paris corn made it a condition of their selling contract with jobbers that the corn should not be sold below $1.05. At once the reason for jobbers' private brands would disappear, at least in great part.

Suppose the jobbers were instructed to make their selling contract conditional upon the sale of Paris corn by the retailer at 15 or 16 cents? Would the retailer have any more reason to switch his customer from Paris corn to another brand?

Starting from the fixed premise that substitution practically always comes from a desire to make more profit, doesn't it seem wholly logical to argue that something that will increase profit on goods now substituted against will just that far make substitution unnecessary and thus prevent it?

Ohio Process Butter Law Becomes Operative June 30.

The Ohio Dairy and Food Department informs the "Grocery World" that the new process butter law of that State, which was passed April 30, 1908, becomes operative June 30, 1908. Its substance is as follows:—

Section 1. No person, firm or corporation shall manufacture for sale, offer or expose for sale, sell, exchange or deliver, or have in his possession with the intent to sell, exchange or deliver, any butter that is produced by taking original packing stock butter or other butter, or both, melting the same so that the butter fat can be drawn off or extracted, mixing the said butter fat with skimmed milk, or milk or cream, or other milk product, and rechurning or reworking the said mixture; nor shall any person, firm or corporation manufacture for sale, offer or expose for sale, sell, exchange or deliver, or have in his possession for any such purpose any butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified or refined, and made to resemble butter, and is commonly known as boiled, or cold extracted process or renovated butter, and which for the purpose of this act is hereby designated as "renovated" or "process butter," unless the same shall be branded or marked as provided in Sec. 2 of this act.

Sec. 2. Whoever, himself or by his agent, or as the servant or agent of another person shall sell, expose for sale or have in his custody or possession with intent to sell any "renovated" or "process butter," as defined in Sec. 1 of this act, shall have the words "renovated butter" or "process butter" conspicuously stamped, labeled or marked in one or two lines and in plain Gothic letters, at least three-eights of an inch square, so that the words cannot be easily defaced, upon two sides of each and every tub, firkin, box or package containing said "renovated" or "process butter," or, if such butter is exposed for sale uncovered or not in a case or package, a placard containing said words in the same form as above described in this section shall be attached to the mass in such a manner as to be easily seen and read by the purchaser. When "renovated" or "process butter" is sold from such package or otherwise at retail, in print, roll or other form, before being delivered to the purchaser, it shall be wrapped in wrappers plainly stamped on the outside thereof with the words "renovated butter" or "process butter" printed or stamped thereon in one or two lines, and in plain Gothic letters at least three-eights of an inch square, and such wrapper shall contain no other words or printing thereon and said words "renovated butter" or "process butter" so stamped or printed on the said wrapper shall not be in any manner concealed, but shall be in plain view of the purchaser at the time of the purchase.

The penalty is $50 to $200 fine and imprisonment for 30 to 60 days.

The New York Letter

Kellogg Threatening Suit Against Macy for Price Cut. More Butter Quotation Trouble. Good Prospects for Seashore Business. Butter Trade Listless Toward Oleo Encroachments.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, June 5, 1908.

The West Side district was largely represented this week at the convention of the Wholesale Grocers' and Manufacturers' Agents in Atlantic City. Those who remained at home have been interested in the reports of the proceedings, which will furnish material for discussion for a time.

As E. W. Murphy, the New York representative of Kellogg & Co., was at the convention a report with reference to possible proceedings against R. H. Macy & Co. for cutting the price of Toasted Corn Flakes could not be verified. The department store advertised the flakes within the last week at 6 cents a package. Mr. Murphy wrote a letter to the department store asking that the flakes be not sold below the 10-cent price which was established. The Macy people framed the letter and hung it in the grocery department with an announcement that the sale at the cut price would continue.

The nerve of the Macy Co. in using his letter as an advertisement of the very business that he was trying to check was not relished by Mr. Murphy, according to all the information available, and he consulted legal advisers on his right to obtain an injunction and as to whether or not he can get damages because of the injury to his business caused by the cutting of prices. He has written the jobbers not to sell to the Macy people, but the latter seems to have no difficulty thus far in getting supplies, although it was at first reported that they had exhausted their stock and could get no more.

More trouble is said to be brewing at the New York Mercantile Exchange over the butter quotations. Since the old methods were reformed as the result of the Martin suit, the quotations have been correct in a sense, but ways have been found for continuing some of the old abuses with a few new ones. The premium system, it is said, is flourishing as vigorously as ever. To make up the premiums, it is charged, grades are juggled, and sharp practices as to weighing are resorted to. The more reputable firms, of course, are above such tricks, but they must speculate largely, holding the butter for a rise in order to get more than the official price plus the premium. The reported juggling of grades is the more important feature of the situation to the trade at large, especially to the retailers. It is not unlikely that the subject will be ventilated at a meeting of the Exchange.

Future canned apricots have been offered by California packers at cuts of 50 to 90 cents below the prices of last year. The packers are said to have put out this offer as a feeler to ascertain the market probabilities. The inference is drawn that all kinds of canned fruit will be lower this year than last.

Up to this time the butter interests have not made any effort to check the revived trade in oleomargarine in this State. It is said that the fight will come after the next Legislature meets, when another effort will be made to have laws passed to prohibit the sale. The butterine manufacturers not only expect to be in a position to defeat such an effort, as they did at the recent session, but they are also getting ready to demand a repeal of the 10-cent tax imposed by the Federal Government on each pound of the colored butterine.

It is still claimed that colored butterine cannot be sold here in the stores without a violation of the State law. But the dealers sell the butterine in its white condition and give to the purchaser the material with which he may color the product so that it will look like butter if he wishes.

Some people say that it is a queer legal situation, if it is unlawful to sell colored butterine, but perfectly lawful to sell the material with which people may themselves color it. But they are reminded that the law is full of perplexities to the layman.

The early reports from seashore resorts indicate that the wholesale and retail groceries which cater especially to this kind of business are starting with fairly good business. In the wholesale district the jobbers say, as a rule, that the trade of this kind is about of the average of recent years and they see no reason why the entire summer should not be highly satisfactory as to this part of the business. The call for groceries on the part of the resorts in the immediate vicinity of New York is said to be as large as it ever was at this time of the year.

Another statement that is now heard among the jobbers is that retailers are recovering from the timidity in buying which became most marked at the time of the recent financial disturbance. It is argued from this that the retailer must see better conditions among his own customers as the basis for his increased confidence.

Coffee Combine Unloads Part of Its Holdings

Brazilian Governmental Syndicate Secretly Sells 160,000 Bags in New York City. Promised Notice to the Trade Not Given. Sale Believed to be Dangerous Precedent.

The coffee trade has been greatly exercised during the week over the fact that the Brazilian coffee syndicate has unloaded the first lot of combine coffee which has been sold in this country. "Grocery World" readers are familiar with the move of the syndicate, taken several months ago, to corner a good part of the spot supply of Rio and Santos coffee, principally the latter, in order to keep the market from going all to pieces, which it undoubtedly would have done. This coffee, amounting to several million bags, has been held in warehouses for several months, greatly restricting the supply of fine Santos.

Secretly and without the notice to the trade which the syndicate agreed to give, the New York agents sold 160,000 bags at private sale at 8½ cents for No. 5 Santos green. The sale was made for the account of the Brazilian Government and was admittedly syndicate coffee. It was disposed of in large blocks.

The custom of large coffee houses who sell coffee at wholesale is to protect themselves as to price by selling against it on the New York coffee exchange. If the buyers of the syndicate coffee did this it might result in the syndicate, in its efforts to protect the market, having to take the coffee in again. So that the understanding is that the buyers of the above lots of syndicate coffee were compelled to agree not to sell against it. To get this agreement the syndicate is believed to have given the buyers some guarantee that if they could not dispose of their coffee in a regular jobbing way without loss the Brazilian Government would reimburse them.

All the 160,000 bags were in New York warehouses when sold. The trade thinks the move was dangerous, because buyers, if filled up with old syndicate coffee, will naturally have less reason to buy new crop, and the Brazilian Government thus enters into a sort of competition with its own growers. It is believed that the first sale will be followed by others from time to time.

Pie cherries are now coming from near-by points, and range from 4 to 6 cents per pound. The crop will be extremely large. The demand is light on account of poor quality.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is listless and unchanged. The demand is from hand to mouth, as it has been for weeks, and prices show no quotable change from a week ago. Values, however, are not particularly strong, and seldom are at this season.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has ruled steady during the week without quotable change. Options have varied only slightly and actual coffee has changed not at all. The demand is comparatively light and is only for actual wants. Mild coffee firm and unchanged. Java and Mocha are unchanged and steady.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market is quite considerably firm, this applying to all important producing sections. Refined sugar shows no change, however, and probably will not for some time at least. The demand is much better. Strawberries are coming into market at a low price, and cherries are about to come, both in very large supply.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is also unchanged and in light supply. Sugar syrup shows no change and only a moderate demand. Molasses is unchanged from last week and in fair demand for the season.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged, but the undertone is stronger. Light spot supplies seem to be the main reason. There may be no advance, however. The demand is fair. Corn is stronger, by reason of the lateness of the season. Some grades of Southern corn have advanced about 2½ cents. Peas are still dull and weak, prices being much below last year. Peaches are unchanged, scarce and dull, prospects still being bright for a good pack. Apples are still lower, and New York gallons are now offered in a large way at $1.75. Small Baltimore canned goods show no change and are in slow demand. Spot California canned goods are unchanged. Some packers have named future prices, on the basis of $1.60 for extra standard lemon cling peaches. This is 15 to 20 cents below last year. There will be no general naming of prices, however, until July, and it is probable that the leading packers will name higher figures than the above. Future apricot prices have also been named on a much lower basis than last year.

Fish.

Mackerel of all grades is unchanged, but the demand shows some improvement. While there is no quotable change in price, a concession could doubtless be obtained on a large order. The first new shore fish were offered on June 6th of last year, but there are none about as yet. Cod, hake and haddock are back numbers for the season. Salmon is in fair demand at unchanged prices, though red Alaska grades are firm. New prices on Columbia River salmon are expected almost any day. Sardines are unchanged, both foreign and domestic. While the nominal price of the latter is still on the basis of $3.10 for quarter oils Eastport, some of the packers are now declining to go along with the combine and are selling somewhat below that.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged, except in spots. Forty's, being scarce on spot, have advanced ½ cent, and the general situation is slightly firmer. The basis price is around 3 cents. On the coast, however, conditions are stronger, and the asking basis price is 3¾ to 4 cents. Peaches are very dull and weak, and old stock can now be gotten around the price of new. The demand is still dull. Apricots are weak also, but the scarcity prevents the same slump which has overtaken peaches. Currants are selling fairly at unchanged prices. Raisins are still very dull and very weak.

Beans and Peas.

Imported pea beans still rule around $2.30 and domestic $2.70 to $2.80. Imported seem to be getting about all the demand. Marrows average $2.50 and are in moderate demand. California limas are about 10 points higher, and the situation is strong; demand only fair. Split peas show no change from last week on any grade.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound over last week, this applying to all

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

grades. Even at the advance the market is quite firm. There is a good consumptive demand for butter as well as speculative demand, and the quality of the present receipts is very fancy. The market is likely to continue on its present basis as long as present weather conditions continue. The make is about normal for the season, and the situation will probably remain firm and unchanged for the balance of the month.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged. There is a very good consumptive demand and the receipts are about normal. There are still a few fancy eggs going into cold storage and the market is firm on the present basis. No change is expected within the next few days.

Cheese.

The new cheese market has advanced ½ cent during the week. Old cheese is about done, and the quality of the new now arriving is showing grass flavor and fine quality. There is a very good consumptive demand, which absorbs the receipts as fast as they arrive, and no change is likely within the next few days. If there is a change, however, it will likely be upward.

Produce.

Bermuda onions, $1.25 per crate; Texas, 75 cents to $1.25 per crate; Egyptian, $2.50 to $3 per bag, demand fair; old potatoes, Pennsylvania, 75 to 90 cents per bushel; York State, 75 to 90 cents per bushel, demand fair; sweet potatoes, firsts, $1 per basket; seconds, 50 cents per basket, demand fair; spinach, 50 to 75 cents per barrel, demand fair; rhubarb, $3 per 100 bunches, demand good; red radishes, $1 to $2 per 100 bunches; white, $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand fair; scullions, 75 cents to $1 per 100, demand good; asparagus, 5 to 20 cents per bunch, demand good: carrots, old, 65 cents per basket; new, 3 to 4 cents per bunch, demand fair; turnips, 50 cents per basket, demand slow; Jersey peas, 25 to 30 cents per basket, demand good; salad, No. 1, 50 cents to $1 per barrel; No. 2, 50 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; cauliflower, No. 1, 6 to 15 cents per head; No. 2, 2 to 3 cents per head, demand fair; beets, 3 cents per bunch, demand good.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line remains unchanged. The demand is seasonable for hams and bacon, and the market is steady on the present basis. Pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged, and both are in good consumptive demand. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats are firm and unchanged, the demand being seasonably good.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.40 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch; red, $1.25 to $2.50 per bunch, demand poor; pineapples, $2.50 to $3 per box, demand fair to good; lemons, $2.25 to $3 per box, demand fair to good; California oranges, $2.75 to $4.25 per box, demand fair to good; grapefruit, $2.50 to $6 per box, demand slow; apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3 per barrel; Spy, $3 to $3.50 per barrel; Russets, $2 to $3 per barrel, demand fair.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

California Canned Goods.

We are gratified to announce that all our reports, as made since the 1st of March last, are being verified, and that the fruit crop in apricots, pears and peaches will be the largest in the history of the State. It may be difficult, however, to get an abundance of first-class quality on account of the trees being so heavily loaded, and in many sections the growers are not thinning sufficiently. This will mean smaller fruit, and as the handling of such fruit is a problem on account of the labor supply, it may be that some of this small fruit will not be harvested at all.

Notwithstanding the heavy fruit crops we do not look for an excessively heavy pack of canned fruits, as the financial scare of last fall has evidently resulted in bringing about a most conservative course on the part of large buyers. The result of this is already seen in the fact that fruit canners are not in a position to name prices on crops excepting for a limited quantity. We believe that a number of canners will be unable to pack on account of not being able to obtain the necessary financial assistance. This is a problem that is facing many of the canners throughout the State, and notwithstanding the heavy fruit crop, it is our opinion that the output will likely be curtailed.

All indications point to the fact that the heavy purchasers in the East are going to buy on the hand-to-mouth policy, and this will undoubtedly take away the speculative feature of the business. The same applies in the dried fruit trade, which ordinarily uses the largest quantity of the fresh fruit crops. This trade is for the time being thoroughly demoralized, and it remains to be seen whether the cheap prices will stimulate business in a large way, or whether the buyers will pursue an ultra-conservative co[illegible] which seems quite likely. From present indications the buyers of these goods propose to force the producer and manufacturer to carry the goods from this year into next, excepting what buyers need for immediate requirements. The result will be that it will take millions of dollars to carry the products in California. The dried fruit packer, therefore, will be unable to carry the goods, and it may develop upon the producer to dry his own fruit and carry it until the trade requires it. This will cause an outlay on the producers part of money for labor and other incidental expenses, and unless the producer is financially fixed to carry this load he will be faced by a serious problem.

The handling of the crops of cling peaches and Bartlett pears, both of which are better in quality and larger in quantity by thousands of tons than for several years past, will depend largely upon the shipping of these varieties fresh, and this again depends upon the purchasing power of the people in our large cities east of the Rocky Mountains. Thousands of cars of California fresh fruit are consumed by the middle and poorer classes, and if it is true that thousands of people are out of work they may not be in a position to purchase the fruit. But this is a matter that time alone will develop. It is sufficient to say that the financial scare of last fall will leave its indelible effect upon the fruit products of California this year.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

During the past week there has been a tendency among buyers to dispose of recent purchases rather than add to their present supply. At the same time the volume of day-to-day's business has been sufficient to hold the market firmly in its former position, and the ability of the middleman has been taxed considerably in finding sufficient full standard 3s tomatoes to fill orders under 75 cents, f. o. b. Quite a few shopworn, poorly wintered, irregularly packed standard 3s tomatoes are still obtainable on the basis of 70 to 72½ cents, the range of price covering as near as it is possible to adjust the quality and condition of offerings. Some buyers have shown a willingness to take this class in preference to paying 2½ cents per dozen advance for the unquestionable quality—as a result stocks are being reduced and it might be well for both buyer and seller to consider the question which is problematical but important—"How many 3s tomatoes still remain unsold in first hands?" For sales for the past thirty days have aggregated a considerable volume and statisticians told us six weeks ago that stocks had been reduced at a surprisingly large ratio during the winter and early spring months, when there didn't seem to be any business of any consequence going. Some brands of 2s have changed hands on the basis of $1 per case, f. o. b. factory, while some markets report a lack of interest among buyers above 90 cents per case. Owing to the light supply of 2s in good condition in this section, packers are not showing any inclination to force business, and as a result the 2s market can be termed quiet.

Owing to the favorable weather conditions which have boosted the future corn market and made it at least barely possible that spot corn might be a good carryover, there is a stronger tone.

Strasbaugh, Silver & Co.
Aberdeen, Md.

Spices.

The market is more active, especially for goods to arrive shortly. There is also a very good demand for spot goods. Stocks of spices in our country are smaller than for years past and we really look for steady advances throughout the list.

Pepper somewhat firmer, with very liberal buying. Cable advices pertaining to crops are to the effect that normal supplies are certain for the year.

Cayennes in better demand, with firmer tone. We look for higher prices.

Cloves are higher, both here and abroad. The demand will increase over the summer months.

Pimento (Allspice).—Good quality remains scarce. The crop is uncertain, owing to the long drouth in Jamaica. Unless heavy rains fall it is likely that we will see a short crop.

Mace very firm and the demand exceedingly good for the better grades.

Nutmegs are steady at record prices. Market continues unusually low and present prices are no doubt safe.

Cassias.—China is more active, especially in futures. Prices are somewhat higher. Saigon and Batavia are steady, but unchanged.

Gingers are in small supply. Higher prices are likely to rule before fall.

Seeds steady at practically unchanged prices. Prices on Dutch Caraway, new crop, are almost as high as present prices for spot goods.

McCormick & Co., Inc.

MARKET NOTES.

Cantaloupes range from $1.50 to $2, all being from Florida except a few from Mexico, which average $3. The demand for good cantaloupes is good.

Blackberries and huckleberries are still scarce. Both are coming alone from North Carolina and both range from 12 to 14 cents per quart. The demand is good.

Watermelons have declined a little, and now range from 35 to 65 cents each. Florida is the only source of supply up to date. The demand is fair.

Southern corn is scarce and practically none has come forward this week.

Strawberries are glutted. All the stock on the market is coming from near-by points, and the price ranges from 4 to 8 cents. Much of the receipts are poor, and the demand for good fruit is good.

Lima beans from Charleston average $2.50 and show fair quality. The demand is slow.

New potatoes are weak and have declined to $2 to $2.50. Poor quality and heavy supply is the cause.

Peas are coming from near-by points and average 35 to 45 cents per basket. Lots are poor.

There are a few Florida pineapples in market, ranging from $2 to $2.75 per crate. Havanas range from $1.50 to $2.50.

Heinz Saloon Boycott Lifted.

The Rumor Started Several Months Ago, Believed by a Competitive House, that the Heinz Co. had Contributed Toward Local Option and Prohibition, which Started Saloon and Hotel Boycott Against Them, is Now Withdrawn. In Letter President of Hotel Men's Association Says it was All a Mistake.

The hotel men and liquor dealers of the East have now formally withdrawn the blow administered to the Heinz Co. several weeks, an incident on which the "Grocery World" made some comment at the time. It will be remembered that on a rumor that the Heinz people had contributed large sums to the Local Option campaign, all the saloon and hotel trade promptly boycotted them and refused to handle their goods. The Heinz Co. instantly denied the report, but the boycott seemed to cling, and only recently was it formally lifted through the following letter:—

To the members of the Pennsylvania State Hotel Association.

Some few months ago we received a report (from what we considered then a reliable source) that the old and reliable firm of H. J. Heinz Co., of Pittsburg, was a large contributor to the prohibition and local option cause, and we were asked to use our influence to get all of the hotels to close their accounts and to stop buying goods from that firm. After hearing this rumor I immediately set to work to find out whether or not it was true, and I find now that there is no truth in the story (started evidently by competitive dealers), and I take great pleasure in handing to our members a copy of a letter addressed to me by H. J. Heinz Co., which is a straightforward business letter of denial, and signed by the treasurer of the company. I know that many hotels in our association have discontinued buying goods from this firm, and now that I find the firm of H. J. Heinz Co. has been done a great injustice, I beg you to open an account with them, if you have not already done so, and buy as many goods as you possibly can from them.

I have also secured copies of letters which I herein present to you, pertaining to the same subject, which is additional proof of their innocence.

Fraternally yours,
David B. Provan,
President.

The story is believed to have been started by a competitive pickle house.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From An Oleo Manufacturer.

Columbus, Ohio, June 2, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We are in receipt from a clipping bureau of your article appearing in the June 1st issue of the "Grocery World."

The oleomargarine subject is one that is almost continuously agitated, from one cause or another, and having had some newspaper writing, experience, we know quite well that editors are always anxious for a true statement of facts. Having, in a very concise form, a full and complete history of the making of butterine, as well as the raw materials, and much general information in the inclosed booklet we tender same to you with our compliments.

We assure you we are not seeking any reference to ourselves, nor any free advertising by the mailing of this booklet, as sentiment for the product, coupled with the desire to have a full knowledge of our butterine conveyed to the reading public, prompts us to presume the liberty of mailing you the inclosed reference.

Yours truly,
The Capital City Dairy Co.,
H. C. Pirrung, Genl. Mgr.

The matter sent with the above was a lengthy article on "An Appeal for Oleomargarine," by Henry C. Pirrung. The greater part of it appeared in the "Grocery World" several months ago.—Ed.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Before me this week are two samples of reading matter advertising which I will use as a basis of a little talk about this particular class of advertising. Both appeared as pure reading matter in the papers which inserted them. The first comes from C. F. Montgomery, grocer, of Beatrice, Neb., and the other from M. Rowan, grocer, of Oswego, N. Y. The Nebraska production is as follows:—

Too Much Corn.—There was a rumor afloat on the streets last evening that a certain well-known citizen of Beatrice was yesterday afternoon ejected from the grocery conducted by C. F. Montgomery on Court street. When interviewed about the matter, Mr. Montgomery stated that the cause for the trouble grew out of the man's persistent demand for 1,100 cans of the corn which he is now offering at the low price of 5 cents per can. He positively refuses to sell more than 1,000 cans to any one party—hence the extreme severity of his actions last evening.

The Oswego advertisement I have had reset as follows. In the original it occupies about seven inches:—

'TIS A VERY CLEVER IDEA.

Mr. Rowan, the Fifth Ward Merchant, Evolves a Novel Plan

For Successfully Meeting the Cash Grocery Store Competition—Some Warm Times Are Expected and Housekeepers Will Reap the Benefits.

In order to combat the growing tendency of the cash grocery stores to monopolize the trade of the store which does a credit business, Mr. Rowan, the Fifth Ward merchant, has concluded to next Saturday, April 18th, between the hours of 1 P. M. and 6 P. M., conduct his business on a strictly cash basis, and therefore no purchases will be charged to any one, and on account of the extremely low prices quoted, under no circumstances will there be any free delivery of goods.

Housekeepers should avail themselves of this opportunity.

Just notice the prices:—White House coffee, 28c. lb.; Eagle milk, 13c. per can; Karo corn syrup, 2 cans 15c.; Fletcher's Castoria, 25c.; Coat's thread, 2 spools, 9c.; Mother's Oats, 9c. package; Ivory soap, 4c. a bar; Silver Key tomatoes, 9c. a can; eggs, 16c. per dozen; Red Seal lye, 8c. a can; Naptha soap, 4c. a bar; Star milk, 2 cans 15c.; oil, 2 gallons, 15c.; hams, 7c. lb.; flour, $1.20 per sack; cream crackers, 2 lbs,, 15c.; sardines, 7 cans, 25c. All other goods in the store will be sold at corresponding prices.

Rowan's Big Cash Sale, West Fifth and Erie streets. Electric car to the door.

Mr. Montgomery's paragraph is of course a mere joke, and was probably only intended as such. Nevertheless it will have two results. It will of course be accepted humorously, as it is intended to be, and will in that way bring Mr. Montgomery's name pleasantly before the public. Naturally that will scarcely induce anybody to buy corn; in other words, it will not produce direct orders. At the same time, however, this sort of an advertisement will emphasize the fact that Mr. Montgomery is selling canned corn at 5 cents. That ought to bring some direct business.

Mr. Rowan's advertisement is more of an advertisement than the other, although it appears as reading matter. The Oswego "Daily Palladium," in which it appeared, is a very poorly printed sheet. The paper is yellow and poor, the type old and battered, and the presswork uneven. For that reason any advertising which appears in it is bound to present the same deficiencies. I think I should scarcely have admitted that the cash grocery store was monopolizing the trade of the credit store, as Mr. Rowan did in his introduction. One other weakness I note is the failure to quote regular prices. It seems to me such a fatal mistake to omit this.

Reading matter advertising is a good thing. If the space used is large enough to have any conspicuousness at all, it will probably attract four times the attention that the same space would if filled with a display advertisement. A good many people unconsciously put their armor on when they start to read display advertisements; the armor is off when they are going over reading matter, even though it embodies advertising also. Another thing: A great many persons never read advertisements at all. With such people as that the choicest display advertisement that can be prepared is like water on a duck's back. As a matter of fact, it is worse, for it never touches the duck's back at all. People of this class will see the advertising if it is reading matter and may be impressed by it.

Against these advantages of reading matter is the fact that it costs several times as much as display advertising. Naturally it makes no difference what it costs if it brings the results.

Slight Change in New Sugar Selling Plan.

Refiners Relieve Buyers of Heavy Telegraph Expense by Permitting Them to Mail, Instead of Wire, Their Assortments.

The sugar refiners have already slightly modified the new selling arrangement which was recently announced and the substance of which appeared last week.

When the new scheme was announced it was supposed that the outside buyers would telegraph their orders and also telegraph the assortment in which they wanted the goods shipped. This would have necessitated heavy telegraph expense, and in order to save buyers a part of it, the refiners have decided that while the order must be telegraphed, the assortment may be mailed.

It is expected that this provision may be abused, as most of the sugar refiners' other regulations have been.

Georgia peaches range from $1.50 to $2 per crate and a few South Carolinas at $4. The demand is rather poor, as the fruit is not especially good.

The local agent named in Mr. Swayze's letter lives at Kaylor, Cambria County, Pa., and his business stationery which Mr. Swayze sends suggests a business man of exceedingly small degree. The Kaylor agent sent the Globe catalogue to Mr. Swayze wrapped in a half sheet of dirty note paper, and tied with black cotton thread, a wide departure from the usual slick and natty methods of mail-order houses. The name of the Kaylor agent is Felice Sciarrata.

The local canvassing work of the Globe Association is done with a cheap circular 4 x 12 inches, which is reproduced.

The catalogue which this $500,000 concern sends out to get business for it is the cheapest of the cheap. The paper is so poor that it crumbles in the hands as its pages are turned. It appears that every consumer who desires to buy goods from the Globe Association must pay a membership fee of $2.50, which to the concern is like finding money, since it doubtless makes a profit on everything it sells.

An examination of the catalogue shows that the association's long suit is the offering of cut-price groceries. In many cases the prices offered as "wholesale prices to members" are far below the cost even in carload lots. Such prices as those are merely quoted for effect, the loss thereby represented being made up on tea, coffee, spices and such things.

Before offering its cut-price assortments the Globe Association hedges as follows regarding its statements of "regular retail prices":—

IN NAMING THE RETAIL PRICES whieh each item in this Grocery Assortment would cost you elsewhere, we have endeavored to be conservative and accurate, but we beg to emphasize the statement that we cannot guarantee that the retail prices printed here are absolutely correct in every case, because there is no established "rock-bound" retail price uniformly charged by retailers on groceries or any other kind of merchandise. To illustrate, the retail price named by the manufacturer on the first item named in our list, a one-pound can of Royal Baking Powder, is 50 cents, and it is usually sold at 50 cents, but if your dealer wants to sell it for 45 or even 40 cents, we know of nothing to prevent him. We therefore name the retail price at 45 cents, believing this to be as near the average retail price charged as we can get it, and we fix our price to Members at 22 cents.

YOU KNOW what you have to pay elsewhere and we are perfectly willing to accept your figures as to what the retail prices in your locality are, merely submitting our list as a guide. But notwithstanding that your dealer is no doubt doing the best he can for you on prices, his expenses and necessary profits and method of doing business certainly make it impossible for him to meet our prices on this Assortment throughout, and we solicit your order on the distinct guarantee that if, when goods arrive, you are not satisfied you have saved your $2.50 Membership several times over, on this single order, you are at perfect liberty to return it to us, at our expense for freight both ways, so that you will not be out 1 cent.

The Broom the Housekeeper Swears By

Have you ever noticed how your customers pick over your brooms, ask questions, and then pick out one and tell you they will try it—to come back later and tell you the corn broke, that it didn't last, and that they don't want any more of the same kind?

If you sell these people a CHIPMAN BROOM you will never have a complaint again, you will never be able to sell them any other kind, and you won't want to, because the profit on the CHIPMAN BROOM is so big.

Chipman & Wills Broom Co., 5 Granite St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Glenny Wrench Jar Cap

A PURE FOOD, COMMON SENSE FRUIT JAR CAP, made from heavy TIN PLATE, especially treated for us.

It does not require a liner, therefore has none, for the dirt and MICROBES to hide behind.

Packed in cartons of one dozen and from 60 to 120 cartons in a case.

PRICE $1.00 per gross F. O. B. Cincinnati, rubbers not included.

It stands to reason that Fels-Naptha soap would not, could not grow so mightily in favor with women all over the United States, with the varied temperatures and waters, unless the soap really contained an ideal blending of the best materials to well and quickly do its work.

Rennet That Makes Good

Rennet ought to do several things:

First, it ought to work quickly—coagulate milk in a very few minutes.

Second, it should have good keeping qualities. Some brands of Rennet work well enough, but spoil on the slightest provocation. That kind of Rennet can't be called good.

Then a Rennet ought to pay a profit to the dealer. To be sure, it can s ill be a good Rennet without profit, but it can't be a good proposition.

Let's see how James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet satisfies these requirements:

First, it is guaranteed to do its work (making junkets, curds or whey) almost instantly—in from two to five minutes. Second, it is guaranteed against spoilage. Third, it is the cleanest Rennet in the United States.

And fourth, it pays you just 100 per cent. profit.

If you can find another Rennet that will do all these things as well, we'll sit back and never say another word.

If you can't find another, then do the sensible thing.

Our U. S. Serial Number is 8955.

The fake in this scheme lies in quoting, with apparent good faith, as "wholesale prices" figures which are 50 or 75 per cent. of wholesale prices, thus making the apparent saving much greater. For instance, in all these assortments sugar is offered at the "wholesale price" of 3 cents per pound, whereas it costs the refiner half as much again to produce it in shipload quantities. Royal baking powder is quoted "wholesale" at 22 cents per pound, far below the actual wholesale price to anybody. Having the consumer well hypnotized with these baits, the Globe Association then proceeds to work him with "Java and Mocha" coffee at 22 cents a pound, and by extortionate prices on other goods in bulk, such as tea, spices, extracts, etc., on which the quality can be more easily concealed.

It would be an extremely good stroke of business for a retail grocer into whose town the Globe Association had intruded to send for one of its cheap assortments. The goods could probably be resold, some of them at least, and the buyer thus made whole. If the qualities are not as represented in the catalogue, compound instead of pure, or misbranded in any way, as the "Grocery World" has a strong idea they would be found to be, then complaint can be made to the Post-office Department or to the Agricultural Department under the Federal food law. The State food law could also be invoked in case there is an agent within the State.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association has taken up the cudgels against the local jobbers, claiming that they sell to private families, to rooming, boarding and clubhouses, also to small restaurants and hotels. Sales to employees by jobbers are also made an issue.

At a meeting of the association last week resolutions were passed protesting that purchases are made from jobbers and manufacturers that are not entitled to wholesale buying, that all this business should fall instead to the retailer.

The following resolution was adopted:—

Be it Resolved, That the members of the Retail Grocers' Association pledge themselves to be more loyal to the wholesalers, manufacturers and jobbers, and beg them to refrain from selling groceries to retail trade, also to abstain from selling to their employees, restricting their sales to retail grocers only.

Further, That the jobber who distributes his goods judiciously will by the good will of the retailer enhance his business very materially in the course of time, which he rightfully merits.

Tennessee.

At the meeting of the Tennessee Association of Retail Grocers, last week, the "Pacific Coast" system of the manufacturer fixing the retail selling price was fully indorsed in the adoption of the following resolution:—

Whereas, The greatest evil in the retail grocery business is the cutting of prices on advertised brands of food products and thereby demoralizing the business in some sections of the State; therefore be it

Resolved, That we commend to the manufacturers the Pacific coast plan, which was adopted by the National Retail Grocers' Association at the Boston convention.

Associations of Manufacturers' Representatives.

At the conference between the Associations of Manufacturers' Representatives, held in Philadelphia last week, it was unanimously agreed that while they were organized independently to handle certain territory they were in reality one organization organized for the protection of manufacturers, wholesale grocers and retailers, and that the main object was to eliminate the many abuses now existing in the distribution of food products. It was agreed that all the associations were to work together in these various matters.

Territories that were to be handled by the different associations were agreed upon. Orders bearing the stamp of any association are to be handled by wholesale grocers under agreements they have signed. Official notice to this effect will be sent to the jobbers by the associations handling the territory in which they are located.

A plan to interchange information between the associations about dishonest salesmen was agreed upon.

A report was made that two or three jobbers in New York were asking members of the associations to pay cartage on goods that were returned by retailers after the retailer had given a bona fide order for the goods. It was unanimously agreed that members of the associations were not to pay any charges on orders that were proven genuine. Those present agreed that every means should be employed by both associations and jobbers to stop retailers returning goods after they had given a bona fide order for same. It was suggested that associations, also jobbers, keep a list of dealers who do not respect or honor their own signature.

The members of the various associations all reported much progress in their working of eliminating abuses that have existed.

Canton, Ill.

The retail meat dealers of Canton, Ill., have adopted and issued the following notice regarding meat deliveries:—

Grocery Diplomacy from the Store Boy's Standpoint.

I'm a great interviewer. I like to talk to all sorts of people, from Dr. Wiley, the Government chemist, down, or up, wherever you think the Doctor is in the scale.

When I can't get somebody to talk to I talk to myself, and have occasionally been considered drunk or crazy for doing it.

On a hot afternoon last week I was sittting in a chair in front of a store in a New Jersey town of about 5,000 people.

The store was on the main street, and from my chair I could get a good view of everything doing.

Pretty soon the delivery boy came up. This particular store don't run a team—it delivers by push cart and boy; a darned sight cheaper scheme than a team, by the way, if you can make it do.

The proprietor of the store was in at lunch, and the store boy improved the shining hour by slumping down on a box near me and swabbing his fevered mug.

He looked to be about 15.

After he'd let off a few hot sighs, I said:—

"Well, son, learning the grocery business?"

"No more of it'n I c'n help," he said tersely.

"What's the matter? Don't like it?" I asked.

"Not on your life!" said the boy, "it ain't no kind of a business for me!"

"And yet you're in it," I suggested.

"Only to get me four dollars a week," he explained.

"What don't you like about it?" I asked.

"Aw, yeh have to take too much lip from everybody," he said. "Have to let a lot o' women climb all over yeh, and can't say a word back fur fear they'll buy their stuff summers else."

"Is that the way your boss does?" I asked.

"Bet your life it is!" said the boy in deep disgust. "He ain't no worse'n the rest, though," he added loyally, after a minute.

"Worse'n that, he calls yeh down if you do it fur him!" he continued. "He called me down once, but I'll bet he won't do it again. He can take his own part now."

"Tell me about it," I said.

"Oh, it wasn't much," he said, "it was right after I come here to work. There was a woman buyin' sparrowgrass one day when I was in the store. The boss told her the price was 30 cents, but she didn't want to pay it, and assed him wouldn't he let her have a bunch fur 25. She said he needn't give her the best bunch in the lot, but she thought he ought to give it to her fur a quarter. Well, he did, and when I took it up to her house, with a lot of other stuff, she went on somethin' fierce. Assed me what he meant be sendin' her a piddlin' little bunch o' grass like that. I up an' said mebbe it was because she had only paid a quarter when the price was 30 cents. I didn't think that was nothin' to say, but she almost spit on me! Come down here and told the boss I'd give her impidence or sumpin', and he give it to me again! Gee! I told him what I said, an' he said that was all right, but I should keep me mouth shut. You bet I will, too, no matter what the women says about him."

"Did this woman kick about the asparagus to your boss?" I asked.

"Sure she did!" he said, "worse'n she did to me! Brung back the bunch!"

"What did he do?" I asked.

"What'd he do?" he repeated in great scorn, "he went'n picked out one of the best bunches an' give it to her! What d'ye know about that! Think I want to git in a business where you have to do them things?"

"Why, what d'ye think?" he went on, "yesterday a woman called the boss down with a lot of people right in the store! Said he give bad weight! Gee, I thought sure he'd light on her then—why, that's skinnin' her, ain't it?"

"Didn't he light on her?" I asked.

"Sure not!" said the boy, with a splurt of disdain.

"Didn't he say anything at all?" I asked.

"Oh, yes," said the boy, "but it was only some mush about always tryin' to do an honest business. Gee! Know what I'd told her? I'd said 'Here you get the —— out o' here—I ain't a stealin' from nobody!' I'll bet she'd a gone!"

"Yes, I feel sure she'd have gone," I agreed. "But she wouldn't have bought any more goods of you."

"She could go shoot herself for all I cared!" he said defiantly. "I wouldn't want her to if she couldn't treat me better'n no dog!

"That's why I wouldn't have no grocery store," explained the boy, "there's so many of 'em yeh have to black people's shoes to keep 'em comin' to yer store."

Just then the boss showed up and the boy quit me before I had a chance to get his ideas on what a good business was. As for his views of the degree of diplomacy that a grocer has to hand out to keep things sweet—you fellows can have 'em for what they're worth.

MR. A. W. JOHNSON.

Dear Sir:—A salesman came in here the other day and wanted to sell me the best Beef Shaver in the world. I asked him the price, and he answered $100. I told him I had just bought the best in the world, Johnson's "Eversharp," and didn't pay any such a price as that by a long shot. Then he got mad, but that made no difference. JOHNSON'S IS GOOD ENOUGH FOR ME. I DON'T BELIEVE THEY'RE MADE ANY BETTER. IT HAS INCREASED MY SALES GREATLY. Yours truly,

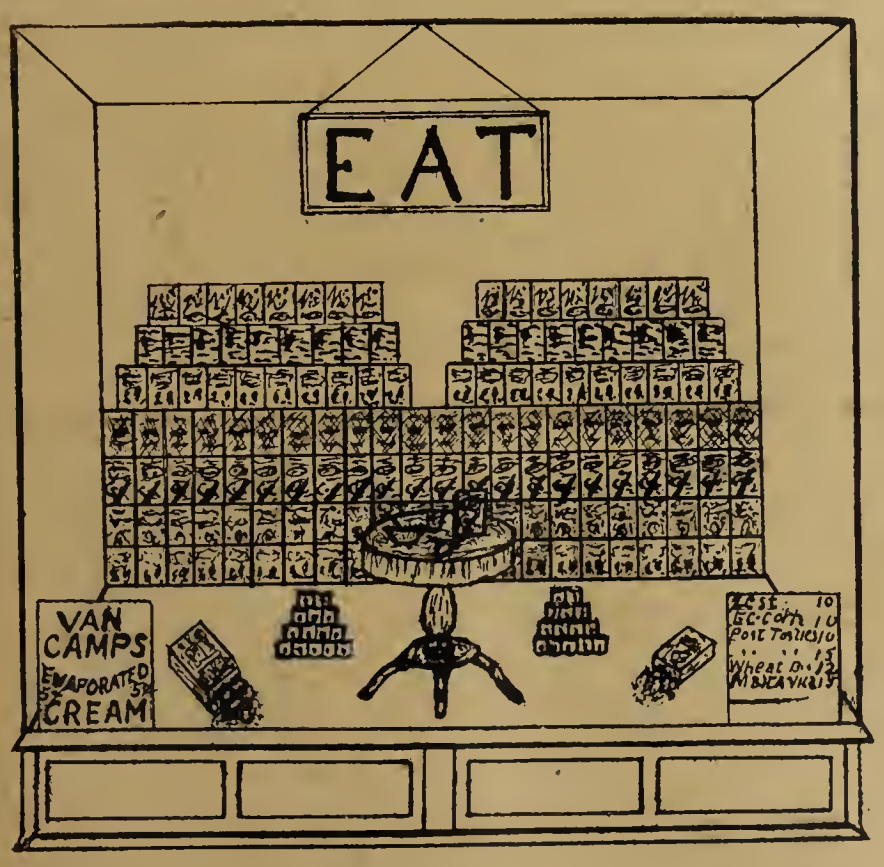
IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "GROCERY WORLD"

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.



"Eat."

Follow these instructions in decorating your window, and notice your cereal trade booming from its quietness.

Cover the floor of your window with clean white paper.

Place in the centre of the window any small stand or table you may have in your possession covered with a suitable cloth or crepe paper. Place on the table a transparent dessert dish full of strawberries, or some other fresh fruit, a sugar bowl, cream pitcher and a carton of any cereal you wish to introduce.

Build a background with various cereals in some attractive manner. For instance, the first row the 15-cent size "Post Toasties," second "Malta-Vita," third "E.-C." corn, etc., finishing with 10-cent size "Post Toasties," "Zest" or "Shredded Wheat Biscuits," with the pretty dish of strawberries on the carton, forming a partial pyramid with the few last rows.

Place a carton of your cereals on each side of the table, partly emptied on the clean paper, to show exactly what your goods are.

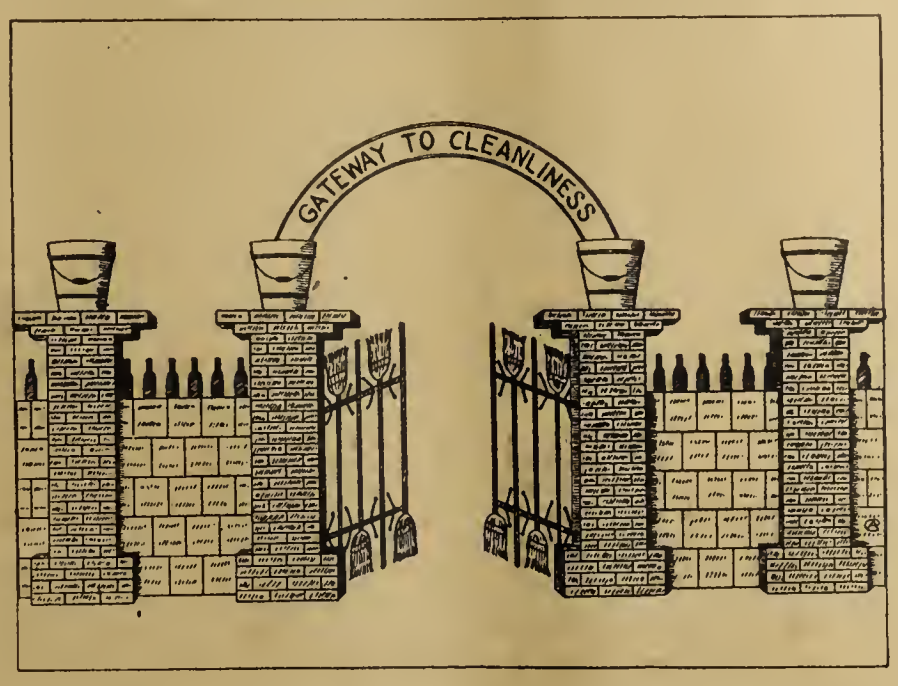
Further back between the emptied cereals and the table place a pyramid of "Van Camp's" evaporated cream, or any other brand of milk or cream you may be selling.

In the both front corners of the window place a card "Van Camp's" evaporated cream and price of same on one, and the various cereals and their prices on the other.

At the top of the glass hang a sign, having printed on in large letters the following: "EAT."

It is not necessary to tell your people what to eat, but after viewing your display they will show you by their purchases what they eat.

Do not allow the fruit in the dessert dish to spoil, but change the fruit often, showing that your cereals and any kind of fruit will make a most delicious dish.



The result of the display will convince you of its merit.

G. A. STROBECK.

Gateway to Cleanliness.

This wall and gateway are built about midway between the front and back of the window.

The columns are built of soap. On top of each is placed a bucket.

The walls are made of cartons of Gold Dust. Along the top of the wall are bottles of blue or ammonia.

The gates are made of children's brooms tied to flat sticks. Clothes pins are stuck on these sticks between the brooms.

The arch is made of wood, either painted or covered with paper, with these words painted on it, "Gateway to Cleanliness."

The floor of the window is covered with loose washing soda.

In the back of the window you can display other articles of this kind, such as washboards, scrub brushes, mops, scouring soaps, etc.

We Could Get More Money

We could get a higher price for Waldorf Lemon and Vanilla extracts, but we wouldn't sell so many, and we prefer the wider business. Several brands of extracts are sold for more than Waldorf, but not one is better—it can't be better. Most are not as good.

Waldorf Extracts are extracts de luxe—pure, strong, yet delicate—the kind no cook will be without once she tastes them.

National Wholesale Grocers' Association in Convention.

attention of manufacturers of the the large staple items in our line of business.

When we call their attention to the injustice of selling direct to 10 or 15 per cent. of the retail trade at less than the large majority of the retail trade, 85 or 90 per cent., can buy the goods for, they generally admit the fairness of our position and declare that they consider the wholesale grocers their legitimate and most economic distributers and would favor an arrangement that would operate to the mutual benefit of manufacturers and jobbers.

We have to report that some manufacturers have already recognized the claims of your committee and have adopted the wholesale grocery trade as the exclusive medium for the distribution of their goods, and your committee report that the result of this arrangement so far has been more than satisfactory to the manufacturer and wholesale grocer and retailer.

We recommend that when any manufacturer thus recognizes the principles of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association by making the jobber his legitimate distributer and refuses to sell direct to 10 or 15 per cent. of the retail trade at less than the 85 or 90 per cent. of the retail trade can buy the goods for, that these manufacturers should have the co-operation and support of every member of this association, and with that in view your committee have arranged with several of the manufacturers to address you on this subject at this time.

The Food Committee, consisting of Frank H. Madden, T. F. Whitmarsh and F. R. Drake, reported in part as follows:—

One important thing accomplished in this direction was the grant of the extension of time in food inspection decision No. 76, permitting the trade to continue for the year to handle goods prepared with sulphur and with benzoate of soda. In the various States the committee, through secretary and counsel, have urged the adoption of uniform laws and regulations by food commissioners throughout the country. During the year the Legislatures of Oklahoma, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, Kentucky, Mississippi, Ohio and West Virginia have been in session, and in these various States bills requiring the dating of packages of foods, declaration of ingredients and percentages, and the statements of weights and measures have been introduced. These have been uniformly opposed and no one of them has become a law. The bills as to dating were opposed upon the ground that they imposed a great hardship upon manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, with no corresponding benefit whatever to consumers.

The report of W. T. Chandler, of Chicago, as chairman of the Committee on Reciprocal Demurrage, was as follows:—

The necessity for a reasonable demurrage charge by the railroad company is generally admitted and its enforcement has no doubt corrected many formerly existing abuses for which railroad companies and shippers were mutually responsible. In view of this successful outcome, it would appear fair and reasonable that the same principle might remedy some of the evils of which the commercial interests have just cause for complaint.

The application of reciprocal demurrage should, and naturally would, have the effect of compelling from railroad companies increased efficiency, not only benefiting the shipping public, but the railroads themselves. Under the only known pending proposition to that end, the Madden Bill proposes demurrage charges by the carrier and certain forfeits by him, and the power to operate it is placed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The chief objection your committee sees in this bill is that all classes of freight shall be carried at an average rate of not less than sixty miles per twenty-four hours, which would tend to reduce the movement to one common and slow level. It might be better to leave that determination to the commission. In the opinion of your committee, the main point for which we should contend is the broad, general principle of reciprocal demurrage, which both parties might well indorse and support. In the end it would conduce to greater efficiency and greater economy of service.

Ths Committee on Sales Discounts recommended the following uniform schedule, to be adopted by all jobbers.—

Sixty days or 1½ per cent. in ten days—Domestic canned goods, soap (laundry, scouring and toilet); coffee (except outside proprietary brands of package goods); spices (ground); tea in less than original packages); flavoring extracts; pipes.

Imported Butter and Tinned Goods.—One hundred and twenty days, or 3 per cent in ten days—Teas in original packages. Thirty days, or 1 per cent. in ten days—All goods not otherwise specified.

Optional—Tobaccos, cigars, cigarettes.

The committee in charge of the effort to secure a uniform canned goods contract reported in substance as follows:—

Our committee considered the question as to how to present this matter to the Cincinnati convention of canners. It was decided that the chairman should make the opening address and be followed by Mr. Wilcox and Mr. Gardner. The attendance at the meeting of the convention was very large, probably 400 or 500. They gave the most careful and respectful attention to all that the committee had to say.

The discusion of the subject was very thorough and good natured. The canners' committee insisting that under no circumstances would they recommend to their convention a contract which contained a clause guaranteeing any percentage of delivery, much less one containing a reciprocal clause such as we had inserted. As we could come to no conclusion at that session, the canners' committee were asked to prepare a contract and present it for our consideration on the following morning, which was done.

We told their committee, after considering their form of contract, that it was impossible for us to accept it and requested them to have a special committee appointed by the convention to consider this subject with our committee and try to arrive at some compromise. They positively refused to do this. Our committee decided that it was useless to further extend the conference, and as the hour for the adjournment of the convention was close at hand, we stated to them that we could not accept a pro rata form of contract and that rather than to have that form go before their convention we would prefer that a report of disagreement should be made. We were unable to learn why they were unwilling to have a committee appointed to confer with us at some later date, when the subject could be given the attention it deserved.

Your committee very much regret their action, as we believe that while it would probably be impossible to get any committee whom the Canners' Association might appoint to agree upon a reciprocal form of contract, we do believe that some general form might be agreed upon.

At the conclusion of this report the following resolution was adopted:—

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Contracts be accepted and approved, and that the committee be given power to act for the National Wholesale Grocers' Asso-tion in approving and adopting a contract covering purchases of Pacific coast dried fruits, nuts and beans, and that it be and hereby is declared the firm conviction of this convention that members of this association should not purchase these products on any contract the terms of which are less favorable that that approved by said committee.

The committee on soap and free soap deals reported as follows:—

The chairman, with the co-operation of Secretary Mehlhop, of the Iowa-Nebraska Association, and Director J. S. Brady, of the National Association, together with several wholesale grocers of Iowa and Nebraska, met the representatives of five of the prominent and controlling soap factors of the West at a meeting in Omaha. After a day's discussion it was fully understood that these factors, each for himself, would abolish free deals and prescribe a jobbers' selling list for their product.

The chairman, together with his colaborers, in an effort to bring about this desirable reform, were greatly encouraged at the result of the meeting and supposed naturally there would be no trouble in securing co-operation. To our disappointment, however, one of the leading soap manufacturing firms refused to abolish free deals, urging the usual argument that they could use it to reduce prices in one section, while maintaining them in others on same list price. The wide distribution of soap manufacturers, covering the whole territory of the National Association, renders it difficult, if not impossible, for your committee to obtain the consent of abolishing free deals over such widely extended territory. Your committee believes that some action on the part of the membership of the National Association, which now claims to control 80 per cent. or more of the distribution, is necessary in order to give the committee opportunity of ultimate success in abolishing the practice.

If the membership would insist, as a condition for handling the soaps of any manufacturer, that the factors would agree to eliminate the free deals from their business, it would bring the matter to a square issue and put your committee in a position where they could work for a general abolition of the free deal abuse. The weight of our influence should be thrown against its continuance.

The committee on inducing manufacturers to refrain from subsidizing jobbers' salesmen reported that the American Tobacco Co. had complied with its request.

During Thursday's session Charles S. Crary, president of the National Canners' Association, addressed the convention on the mutual relations of jobber and packer, touching on the canners' refusal to accept the jobbers' form of contract. He spoke in part as follows:—

The wholesale grocer has elected to be the important middleman in the distribution of food products between the manufacturer and the consumer. He has constituted himself as the logical clearing house for the packers' products, and the packer, recognizing the benefits of the jobbers' well organized system of distribution, will avail himself of it just so long as the toll charged is a reasonable one, and just so long as the jobber confines himself to the business of distribution and does not enter the field as a competitor of the packer. When a packer has seen his own trade on a given brand of goods dwindle from year to year, finally to be displaced entirely by the jobber's brand, the reputation of which has been built up by the assurance that it is "just as good," he at last awakens to the fact that he should confine his efforts exclusively either to his own brands or that of the jobber, and if he decides to handle his own, this means a reorganization of the selling end of his business and the establishment of his own plan for distribution.

A close relationship between the individual packer and jobber exists only by virtue of their co-operation in the distribution of the packers' brands. Take away that relationship and the packer has lost the incentive for enthusiasm and painstaking effort. When a man identifies himself with any business, if that business is to get the best there is in him, he enters upon it as a life business, and to make it amount to anything must build for himself.

The personality of the seller and his known disposition to meet his contracts fairly are in reality more vital to you than the contract itself. the Contract Committee from your association which paid us a visit in Cincinnati last February was, doubtless, disappointed because there was not shown a keener disposition on the part of the canners to agree with them on a uniform contract.

There seemed to be a feeling prevalent among the canners that the matter of contracts was largely a personal one, and for that reason that it would be quite impossible to get together on important points.

The selling of goods by a packer under his own label and the buying of goods by a jobber unlabeled are two entirely separate and distinct propositions.

No particular form of contract could be established as a hard and fast rule.

The packer who puts out a line of fancy goods under his own brand always knows that the quantity of high-grade stock he is to harvest is uncertain, and there should certainly be no criticism on the part of the distributer if he cares to handle the packers' goods at all, in taking them on a pro rata contract.

The question of the lack of good faith in making deliveries under pro rata contracts on packers' brands does not arise as it would if the goods were bought unlabeled, because the buyer knows that the packer will strain every point to the care of his own trade name.

Now, the jobber wishes to buy goods for his label and naturally he is the one to take the initiative in the transaction. He wants a given quantity of goods, and it is just as much out of reason for the packer to attempt to change this buyer's specifications as to his requirements as it is for the jobber to attempt to dictate to the packer how and under what form of contract he should sell his goods.

If seller is willing to contract for the delivery of 10,000 cases of standard goods on a contract with 80 per cent. delivery guaranteed, then instead, let the contract be placed for 8,000 cases with a guarantee of full delivery, and make a closed contract of it.

Walter A. Frost, president of the National Canned Goods and Dried Fruit Brokers' Association, also delivered an address along the same line.

The committee which has been endeavoring to get together with the California dried fruit men on a form of uniform contract also reported on Thursday. This matter has been previously discussed in the "Grocery World." The committee reported that several conferences had been held with the Californians, and related at length the various details of the jobbers' objections. The committee reported that no agreement had been reached as yet.

In the evening a banquet was held, at which Charles H. Treat, United States Treasurer, was the chief speaker. His address was mainly devoted to a discussion of the panic and its causes.

Special Things to Advertise

Did you ever think what a fine thing it was for any business to have special things to advertise—things to kindle interest—to take the store out of the tiresome commonplace where it appears like any other grocery store?

Gurnse Butter is one of these. It is a fancy dairy print butter, made in our own dairies, watched and tended and rigidly inspected until it is wrapped in brine-dipped paper and packed in ornamental cartons.

You can ring the changes on Gurnse Butter as a leader in a way never possible with ordinary butter.

And it will always stand up for every claim you make for it; that's the best part of it.

Packed in 30 and 50-pound boxes—pound and half pounds—29 cents
Prices subject to market change.

Dr. H. W. Wiley, Government chemist, also spoke, the theme of his remarks being that the jobbers had better obey the existent food laws, unless they wanted still severer laws passed.

A number of manufacturers who addressed the convention informally during the day said they would be more in favor of cutting off retail organizations if the jobbers would cut out their private brands.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

REGARDING OIL.

From now on you'll have a demand for table oil. We have two brands of Italian olive oil in cans and two in bottles. The cans pay a little better profit and people have a notion that it's more economical. The one-half gallon at $1.40 is the popular seller. We know of none of higher quality. It is positively virgin goods. In other words, first pressing. In dealing with close people be careful you don't become tempted to sell the domestic for imported. Every bottle of oil you sell instruct the buyer to remove the cork, wipe the inside of the neck and invariably use the new cork that you give them. Push "Our Own Brand" in bottles.

COOKED GOODS.

Every year we are helping more and more to do away with home summer cooking. Now is the time to talk Delicatessen. Cooked meats of all kinds to slice, salads of all kinds by the pound, stews, soups, beans, etc. Women pretend they prefer their own, but it's only a pretense. Last summer's sales proved this. Introduce your customer to this department. Explain the wonderful convenience of enjoying a cold roast beef dinner without the annoyance of cooking it, and particularly without the thought of having to "use up" the rest of the roast.

THE GALLON APPLE SCHEME.

You know we're loaded with gallon apples and the bottom has fairly dropped out of the wholesale price. We're going to cut these and sell them by the pound at 5 cents. You say it's a poor time to do this with so much fresh fruit in the market. Forget that. Apple pies and apple cake, and even apple sauce, is always in order. A big glass punch bowl will be placed on the grocery counter filled with these apples and we want you to sell one every day. A ½ cent commission on every pound sold.

NATIVE BERRIES.

Beginning Monday we'll have strawberries every day from Simpson's farm. Nothing finer came to the city last year. We have contracted for all he'll raise, so keep up your standing order campaign and talk about the size and sweetness and delicious flavor of these rare Cumberlands. They will bring a couple cents more than the common berries, but the difference is in the fruit. We will have the cream of the crop and no one is going to grudge the couple extra pennies. It's the same old story—quality counts.

SPEAKING OF QUALITY.

The man who can talk quality and get his price is the salesman. Not a cold "The Best," but a good strong intelligent argument on why the thing is the best. When President Roosevelt springs an argument on a man or an audience he tells why. He presents facts. So you must go into a few details, giving your reasons for saying that such and such a thing is worth more than the other thing. We do the backing up. We "deliver" the quality you describe.

Obstacle to Food Law Enforcement in Washington.

Under a ruling made during the week by the Police Court in Washington, D. C., all convictions obtained by District health officers for violations of the pure food law since the passing of the act of 1906 are void. The court held that all such prosecutions should originate in the Department of Agriculture. By the act of 1898 health officers were empowered to analyze samples believed to be adulterated. These samples were to be held by the chemist of the health office thirty days, in which time the defendant could make application for portions of the same to have an analysis made by his own chemist. In the act of 1906 it is declared that all samples and articles on which prosecutions are to be based shall be collected by inspectors of the Agricultural Department and the District health officers, and such samples are to be turned over to the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department for analysis. If analysis discloses a violation of the law, the Agricultural Department is to notify the United States District Attorney, who shall bring the suit. Prior to the passing of the act of 1906 prosecutions under the pure food law were wholly in the hands of the District health officers. Since the passing of that law both the Department of Agriculture and the health officers have been making analyses and bringing suits. Judge Mullowny held this practice illegal, as it made it possible for both the Department of Agriculture and the District health officers to prosecute a defendant for the same offense. There being a conflict of the laws, he held the later law repealed the former act, and health officers had no authority to analyze samples and begin prosecutions. The ruling was made when Judge Mullowny dismissed a case brought by the health officers against William F. Burns, a grocer, charged with selling impure milk.

You have a lot of customers who annoy the life out of you. Head them off with Forbes' indexed coupon books. See advertisement.

Requests for information in this Department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge.

Question: K., Virginia.—Kindly inform me if I can legally use a circular for advertising purposes printed in the form and similar to a bank note or the United States flag, and can I print an advertisement on a flag?

Answer.—You cannot do this with a bank note, but you can with a flag. The Federal Act of February 5, 1867, Ch. 26, 14 Stat. L. 383, forbids any person to "design, engrave, print, in any manner, make or execute, utter, issue, distribute, circulate, or use," any business or professional card, notice, placard, circular, handbill or advertisement in the likeness of any National bank note, or to write, print or otherwise impress any advertisement or notice upon any such note. The penalty is a fine of $100.

This being put into a little simpler language means that you cannot legally use, either in advertising or in any other way, a facsimile of a National bank note. Also, you cannot print any advertisement upon a bank note.

The use of advertising in connection with the American flag is usually regulated by State statutes. I find nothing in the statutes of Virginia to prevent it.

Norfolk string beans average $1.75 per crate and North Carolinas about the same. The demand is fair.

Use a Box Yourself

Before you decide positively to stock Ohio Blue Tip Safety Matches get a box and use it yourself. We're perfectly willing to rest our case on that box. Write us for it if you can't get it anywhere else.

You'll find every match perfect, every one instantly ready for business. Just as safe as any safety match and better because you can strike the tip anywhere.

Much safer than any parlor match.

OHIO MATCH SALES CO.

Backwards and Forwards

You grocers know the ups and downs of the breakfast food business. You know how dozens and dozens of products have come on the market, filled your shelves and stayed there. Could we possibly point to a more convincing argument in favor of the quality of Egg-O-See and E-C Corn than the fact that the sales of both are constantly growing.

Egg-O-See Cereal Company
QUINCY CHICAGO BUFFALO

How to Have An Unusual Sensation

We agree that it would be better to buy good canned goods without a full delivery contract than poor goods on a 100 per cent. delivery contract.

But you can't possibly get any finer Maryland canned goods than Blue Bell and Clover Farm, and when you can get goods of that class with full delivery assured, it makes about the ideal canned goods proposition, does'nt it?

If you would like the unusual sensation of getting all the future canned goods you buy, specify either of these two brands.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Delivering at a Moment's Notice

Every grocer loses some business because he can't deliver everything at a moment's notice. But if he will use a Lindsley Car he can. It simply stands before your door all day long. Turn a crank and the power is on. You can whisk goods to the buyer and run back again in a jiffy.

Remember a Lindsley Car never eats, except while it is working.

You don't need a mechanic to enable you to accomplish these wonders. A boy can run the Lindsley Car and keep it in order. It is the simplest automobile made, and wonderfully capable—carries 1500 pounds thirty miles on a gallon of gasoline, and over rough roads.

LOWNEY'S COCOA has maintained its high quality unimpaired regardless of the rise in the price of cocoa beans. For years now it has appealed to the best trade on its merits and become A STAPLE ARTICLE with a sure demand, constant and growing. Wide advertising in street cars, newspapers and magazines will go on pushing, pushing, pushing. It is a safe investment, and PAYS A FAIR PROFIT.

LOWNEY'S PREMIUM CHOCOLATE for cooking is of the same superfine quality.

No Rival for Winorr

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

"I wouldn't handle it; I'm selling enough brands of canned corn now?"

Do you say that to our Winorr proposition? If you do, you can hardly know about Winorr, because in the ordinary sense it is not canned corn at all. It is a corn specialty—corn packed without the hulls. You have nothing like it now, and for that reason it competes with nothing and has no competition.

True, it may cut in somewhat to your sales of other brands, but what of it, if it makes you as much profit and gives the customer better satisfaction?

We also pack a full line of finest quality Berries and Vegetables, moist and condensed Mince Meat, Catsup and Salad Dressing.

We are the largest canners of Sauer Kraut in the United States.

Light Up, Man!

Light for your store is the cheapest investment you can make.

It gives your store attractiveness.

It makes it a pleasant place to come.

It makes it conspicuous, and thereby advertises it.

People feel more comfortable trading in a light store.

You feel more comfortable working in a light store.

Let us look over the ground for you.

You Are the One That Gets Hurt

When you sell your customers a low-priced coffee. You are taking chances unless it's ARIOSA, because it is very difficult to get a good quality of coffee at a low price and yet have the flavor always the same.

You can't afford to take chances. We buy in larger quantities than any five concerns in the country, and we can afford to give quality and make a price that nobody can duplicate.

"ENTERPRISE"

With New Total Registering Device

The saving of time will doubly pay for it.

The convenience alone will make it worth all it costs.

It is cleaner, as it dispenses with the use of measures and the consequent absence of flies and dirt.

SELF-PRIMING and MEASURING PUMP

Accurately measures molasses, heavy oils, tar and other thick liquids. Has total registering device showing when stock is low in barrel.

No. 97 Pump costs $6.00; Auger, 75 cents; Extension Tube 50 cents a foot.

REGARDLESS

of your requirements we want your coupon book business. Makes no difference whether you want few or many. We are greatly pleased with the large number of new people, who in 1907, began using our

and have apparently settled down to their continuous use. The convenience of the INDEX appeals to them.

100,000 MORE BOOKS SOLD IN 1907 THAN 1906

Write for free samples and then send in an order. They do not cost much and after you learn their merits you will be glad to use them through 1908 and as much longer as you are in business.

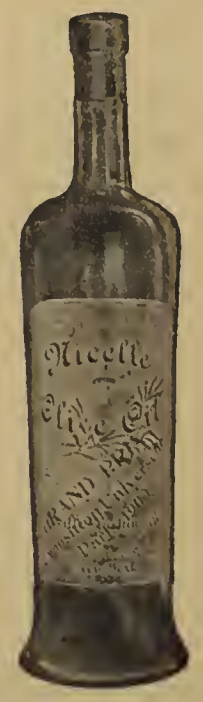
This Will Sell Goods

No more useful fixture has ever been invented. Holds five jars where they can be seen and help sales.

Either oak or cherry, 3-coat finish. No old-fashioned hinges—swings on a bale to the right. Takes no more room than the 4-jar fixture. Nickel-plated trimmings.



This is an ornament, an economizer of room, and a silent salesman that knows its business.

They Must Keep Expert

It is a provable fact that a majority of cooking experts use Nicelle Olive Oil in all their demonstrations.

Why? Because they must use the very best oil obtainable in order to insure results. Otherwise they would soon cease to be known as experts.

Nicelle Olive Oil is bottled in France, where produced. It is the first pressing of the finest oil olive grown. You will be proud to sell it.

The Old Brands Lag Behind

The leading soap powder to-day is unquestionably Snow Boy. Don't take our word for this—ask anybody who keeps posted on conditions.

Time was when other brands beat Snow Boy, but that time is past. Snow Boy Washing Powder is now ahead because it never hurts anybody's hands, and always does its work. It's a perfect cleanser, and never disappoints. Other soap powders will clean well enough, but they also clean off the skin from the user's hands.

The premiums help, too.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Write for our catalogue.

FULTON & WALKER CO. TWENTIETH and FILBERT STS. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

No Loss on Loose Goods

¶ Don't have goods loose and let dirt, bugs and hungry customers eat up half your profits. A store like this saves time hunting for goods that ought to be in sight at all times, pleases customers and disappoints the poor little bugs. Our catalogue shows other stores we have fitted up. Send for it.

EGG-O-SEE COMPANY'S POLICY ENDORSED

¶ The following resolution unanimously adopted by the National Retail Grocers' Association endorses the policy of the Egg-O-See Cereal Company. The Egg-O-See policy is a policy of co-operation with the retail grocer. The Egg-O-See Company is for the retail grocer not against him.

"Resolved, By the Retail Grocers' Association, in convention assembled at Boston, Mass., that we condemn the policy of those magazines which have prostituted their reading columns in furtherance of the selfish designs of certain advertisers who have sought to prejudice the public against the retail grocers of this country by means of a campaign against what they have chosen to call 'substitution'; we condemn the policy of those manufacturers who are responsible for this campaign and who seek to force their goods upon the shelves of the retail grocers by any and all means, regardless of the margins of profit allowed for handling them.

"Resolved, That we condemn any practice or policy on the part of manufacturers of grocery products which robs the retailer of any part of the legitimate profit on any of the goods he handles.

"Resolved, That we cordially approve and recommend the sale of those goods of quality on which the grocer can make a proper and living profit, regardless of whether such goods are or are not advertised in magazines of general circulation."

¶ The Egg-O-See policy has always been in full accord with the spirit of the above resolution.

The Grocer's Power

We make a superfine line of Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels, but we don't try to make you sell them.

We give you credit for brains—brains to select goods—brains to sell them. You can influence your customers. That's why you are in business.

Wouldn't it be foolish for us to ignore your power and waste advertising trying to make people demand that you sell our goods? We go the other way about it. We spend our advertising money for you, not against you by giving you Universal Coupons with every case of our goods. You can exchange them for many useful articles. It pays to pull together.

Seasonable Specialties

(OUR OWN CREATIONS)

Government Inspection Establishment No. 257

Prepared with the greatest care by clean methods in the Finest, Cleanest and most Sanitary Abattoirs and Sausage Kitchens in the country and are especially adapted for use during the coming Summer season.

Meat Loaf

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked in loaves of about eight pounds. Delicious. Can be served cold, sliced thin, or warmed up in oven to take the place of a roast.

Lunch Roll (Copyrighted.)

Choice, tender pieces of pork, very mildly cured; stuffed in linen sack or container. Boiled and ready to use in place of boiled ham. Makes an elegant dish when fried in place of ham or bacon.

Cervelat (also known as Summer Sausage or Winter Bologna.)

Not to be confounded with Lebanon Bologna or similar cheap products. Very choice and different from the numerous brands on the market from the fact that it contains no cereals. In beef casings—also a limited supply in hog casings.

Burk's Hams

Different from others in cut and trim, having short shanks and round butts. No salty taste—being new and sugar cured. Bright color, smoked with hickory wood.

Butternut Bacon

In strips, neatly wrapped in parchment paper. Strung with white cord and cut perfectly square, making every ounce available to the consumer. No waste. Not especially lean, being selected from best corn fed hogs, which imparts that tender, nutty flavor.

HOW TO ADVERTISE A RETAIL STORE

BY ALBERT E. EDGAR

TEACHES

Nearly everybody in the English speaking world knows the reputation that the International Correspondence School, Scranton, Pa., have for teaching advertising by correspondence. The letter below is from the principal of that School of Advertising. It is an unsolicited compliment.

"THE OUTING PUBLISHING CO.,
Deposit, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I have read very carefully your new book, 'How to Advertise a Retail Store.' I want to say that, in my judgment, it is by far the best book on retail advertising that I have ever seen. It is really a comprehensive short course in advertising. Some subjects must necessarily be treated briefly in single-volume work on advertising, but Mr. Edgar has certainly done his work thoroughly. If a retail advertiser cannot get $5.00 worth of information out of this book, there is something wrong with him. This book is already very popular here in our School. Two of the men here have already expressed their desire to own a personal copy. As I wrote you the other day, very frequently we have requests from students for a list of good books. We have already had occasion to recommend this book to three students.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) S. ROLAND HALL,
Principal, School of Advertising."

"We haven't the slightest hesitation in recommending it to every retailer in Canada, and to every wholesaler, for that matter. It is splendidly written, neatly printed and contains information indispensable to every merchant. We are giving your book a good boost.

What a department store advertising man says:

"Editor of BRAINS,
Dear Sir: I don't want any money back on the Edgar book, 'How to Advertise a Retail Store.' It is worth the price and I consider it the most practical book of any I own and I've bought about all that have been printed. Yours very truly,

The opinion of one of New York's prominent copy specialists:

"The Editor of BRAINS, Deposit, N. Y.
Dear Sir: I have just received my copy of 'How to Advertise a Retail Store,' and I want to say to you that of all the books and periodicals in my business library it is by far the most practical and useful. The retailer or business man who has goods to sell, who cannot get out of it several times its cost every year, had better go out of business. The book will be a constant source of profit to me and I believe it will to every retailer who wants to make more money. It is complete and I think it is no more than right that you should know that it is appreciated.
Yours very truly,

Beef Extract Manufacturers Using Corned Beef

Dr. Lawall, State Chemist, Points this Out and Suggests that if the Label Fails to State this the Article is Misbranded. In Germany they Fine Laborers who Work for Convicted Food Adulterators. Month's Work for the Department and Adverse Chemist's Reports.

In the current number of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Bulletin, which reports the work of the department up to May 15th, Dr. Charles H. Lawall, State chemist, has an interesting article on meat extracts. In the course of it he charges that certain manufacturers of beef extract use corned beef instead of fresh beef. An extract from the article in question follows:—

> It is a self-evident fact that beef extract that contains but 15 per cent. of moisture is far superior to one which may cost the consumer just as much, but which contains from 25 to 50 per cent. of moisture. It is also clearly apparent that a beef extract which contains from 10 to 12 per cent. of sodium chloride, calculated to the dry substance, is of greater value than one which contains from 15 to 30 per cent., as from $1 to $2 is a pretty high price to pay for common salt.
> One of the methods sometimes employed in making cheap meat preparations is to utilize a portion of the liquid used in making preserved meats, such as corned beef, which fluid undoubtedly contains a large proportion of soluble proteid matter having a food value, but which also contains appreciable quantities of potassium nitrate or saltpetre. This latter constituent is not desirable in a preparation intended for persons whose digestive processes have been enfeebled by disease, and when present, as in some of the instances cited below, in quantities of from .5 to 2 per cent., corresponding to from 1 to 5 grains to a tablespoonful of the preparation, its presence should be stated on the label, so that the physician who often advises its use, may be aware of the presence of this constituent.
> In about one-half of the samples examined the nitrogen was present to the amount of not less than approximately 8 per cent., calculated to the dry material. In some of them, however, it was far below this figure. as regards sodium chloride, the requirement of not more than 12 per cent. in the dry extract was exceeded in eighteen out of the twenty-three samples, in several cases reaching 20 per cent. and over, and in one case reaching to a fraction over 30 per cent. In some of the bouillon preparations, benzoic acid was found, which was stated upon the label to be present in not more than one-tenth of 1 per cent. in the tomato catsup used in the preparation of the bouillon. This was largely exceeded in one case, which contained nearly double the amount in the finished preparation, that was stated to be present in the tomato catsup alone.
> Generally speaking, the claims made on the labels of these preparations are not unwarranted nor extravagant, except in the fact that most of them bear the statement that this particular product is the best in the market. In such cases where the presence of a large proportion of potassium nitrate or saltpetre indicates the use of cured meat instead of fresh meat in the preparation of the extract, I believe that such fact should be stated upon the label, and that neglect to do this is equivalent to misbranding.

Those who think that the enforcement of food laws in this country is harsh and severe should take comfort from a statement made in this number of the bulletin by Dr. H. C. Stiefel, who is familiar with the conditions surrounding the enforcement of the German food laws. Dr. Stiefel tells of a German manufacturer found guilty in 1903 of the illegal sale of imitation raspberry marmalade. Appeal was taken from one court to another until the highest German court was reached. This court has just handed down the final decision in the case as follows: The manufacturer to pay 1,500 marks fine or one hundred days' imprisonment, the bookkeeper is fined 500 marks (10 per cent. of his yearly salary) or fifty days' imprisonment, the foreman of the factory is fined 300 marks (10 per cent. of his yearly salary), or forty days' imprisonment, and the laborer, the jelly boiler, is fined 75 marks, or ten days' imprisonment. The verdict of the court is to be published in three newspapers in the manufacturer's home city, and finally all costs of the trial, appeals, experts, etc., are to be placed upon the manufacturer.

The courts decided that the bookkeeper, the foreman in the factory and the jelly boiler knew perfectly well that they were making a jelly that was to be sold as pure which they knew was false and deceiving. They were therefore guilty with the manufacturer himself, though in a lesser degree, as the manufacturer was striving for excessive profit, and his subordinates were to a certain extent compelled to do the work in order to retain their positions.

There has never been a case in this country, so far as is known, where minor employees of a food adulterator have been prosecuted.

Jobbers Want Proprietary Prices Limited, But —

They Say They Could Not Trust All of Their Number to Keep Them and the Work of Punishing the Renegades Would be Heavy and Costly. A Sugar Incident as a Sample.

Representatives of the "Grocery World" have interviewed a number of wholesale grocers during the past week regarding the attitude of the wholesale trade toward a project to have manufacturers of proprietary brands generally limit the selling prices, so that both the wholesale and retail trade could make a better profit on proprietary goods than they make now. It goes without saying that the plan would depend on the price the manufacturer fixes being a fair one.

The general feeling among the wholesale trade is that the plan would be a good one. In many lines the prices of proprietary goods are cut so deeply that the jobber not only makes no profit, but actually nets a loss. In Philadelphia flour is as good an illustration of this as anything else. In the case of certain standard brands of flour, neither the jobber nor the retailer makes anything like an adequate profit.

In spite of a fairly general attitude of approbation, however, the jobbers argue that no limited price plan would be worth two cents if it were not rigidly observed, that there are certain wholesalers who would not observe it, and that the difficulty of apprehending and punishing these would be so great as to be almost insurmountable.

To begin with, they say, a jobber will cut the price on an article he has agreed to sell at a fixed price only. He cuts it to a retailer, who will not expose him for two reasons: First, because he doesn't wish to kill the goose that laid the golden egg, and second, because he has a friendly feeling toward the jobber who gives him plums.

The fact that some jobber is cutting, however, does usually come to light, when the retailer stops buying that particular article from the jobber he has always bought it from, and who does not cut the price. In such cases it is easy to put two and two together and to fasten suspicion on some certain jobber. Even then the case is almost impossible to prove, because neither the jobber nor the retailer can be compelled to testify, and there is usually nothing in writing. But suppose the case is proven and the jobber fined or cut off—the jobber or jobbers who were instrumental in the exposure always lose trade by it. The retailers who benefited by the cut price resent it and divert their trade elsewhere. This, say the jobbers, has been the history of every such movement.

Nearly all the jobbers seen used as an illustration of the great difficulty of detecting violators of limited prices, an incident which occurred during the sugar fight a few years ago. A certain Philadelphia jobbing house, who are one of the ringleaders in the present fight against the Retail Grocers' Association, and whose name has several times appeared in these columns in connection with it, were accused of violating a limited price agreement on sugar. They carried on their plans so secretly that for a long time nothing could be fastened on them, and in desperation one house finally offered $25 for a bill from this concern showing a cut price. Finally the house was caught red-handed under most humiliating circumstances and forced to pay the penalty.

As a result of that campaign every jobber active in it lost some trade.

The jobbers' attitude toward the plan can therefore be summed up thus: They are in favor of the plan in the abstract, but they could not trust certain of their number to keep it, and the task of punishing them they feel would be very arduous and expensive.

North Dakota's Experience with Net Weight Law

Food Commissioner Ladd Tells of His Trouble to Make Biscuit Trust Label Its Packages. What the Enforcement of the Law did to the Weight of Canned Goods Sold There. Commissioner Believes in Dating Canned Goods.

The food law of North Dakota requires that net weight be shown upon each and every package. The clause reads as follows:—

> If every package, bottle or container does not bear the true net weight, the name of the real manufacturer or jobber and the true grade or class of the product, the same to be expressed upon the face of the principal label in clear, distinct English words in black type upon a white background, said type to be in size uniform with that used to name brand or producer.

Goods which are not so labeled are therefore, under the law of this State, declared to be misbranded, therefore illegal. There are several companies which in the past have attempted to evade this feature of the law. The arguments which have been put up are very crude when one analyzes the motive which is back of it. Is there any reason why the public should not know just how much material they are expected to receive in any given package? Are they not entitled to know how much packing and how much actual food material? Therefore if there is shown upon the package the true net weight or measure, and the true grade, both being equally essential, the public then have a correct knowledge of what is contained in the same.

The representatives of the National Biscuit Co., for example, claim exemption on the grounds that such exemption has been promised them, and for the further reason that their products are always sold by the package and at certain specified prices without regard to quantity. The same has been put up in the past by manufacturers of extracts, who use bottles with panels so thick and closely compressed together that two-ounce containers actually contain less than one ounce. Spice manufacturers claimed that they were selling packages at 10 and 15 cents and not by weight. These products, supposed to contain four ounces, were put up in competition with those of full net weight. There is no objection to their selling a 10-cent package, providing they inform the public how much is supposed to be contained in this package. So it seems to me that the National Biscuit Co. may justly be expected to comply with this reasonable provision, and when any company refuses to do so it seems evident that they have some good reason, presumably that their goods would not meet the test, or that the public would be informed in such a way as to be undeceived where they have been wrongly educated by those who desire to evade the law. That it would be a hardship to specify on the label the true net weight, when the same is being printed, no one can successfully maintain.

the gross weight in all of the cans of foods at that time examined. Now, it is interesting to compare the results with later investigations and see whether the agitation in favor of net weight has resulted in improving the amount of products put into the cans.

Making a summary of the gross weights, expressed in ounces, for corn, peas and tomatoes, and comparing them with the weights of the same brands, taken for the years 1903 and 1907, we have as follows:

GROSS WEIGHT IN OUNCES.

	1903.	1907.	Gain Per Cent.
Corn	20.7	24.25	17.1
Peas	20.9	25.37	21.3
Tomatoes . . .	32.9	39.27	19.3

It will be readily seen that the agitation in North Dakota and the enforcement of the food law requiring the net weight to be shown has actually resulted in a gain for contents of the cans for corn of 17.1 per cent.; in the case of peas of 21.3 per cent.; and in the case of tomatoes of 19.2 per cent.; and this in spite of the fact that prices for food products have very materially increased, and we might expect slack fillings were not our law being enforced.

During the past two years there has also been considerable discussion as to whether there is any advantage in having the date when the goods are packed clearly indicated upon the can. Some have proposed to have this fact shown upon the label; others, by the indentation of the date into the tops of the cans. There is no question but what there are several food products which deteriorate on keeping even in sealed cans for a considerable length of time. It is claimed that other products are not so affected, nevertheless it would seem desirable that the public should have some information as to how old any product is which is to be offered for sale as a food product.

It has been claimed that some of the goods upon the market are old products on which new labels have been used. The first direct evidence we have of this is a can of tomatoes, Lab. No. 4,929. As sold in this state the label was fresh and indicated a new stock of goods. The ends of the can, however, were considerably corroded and led to some suspicion as to the freshness of the goods. On removing the outer label there was shown parts of an old label, which had not been wholly removed from the can. The interior of the can was also seriously corroded and pitted. On notifying the company that the product was condemned they replied from New York that the "———— Co., of New York, discontinued its canning business in the spring of 1900 and had not put up any tomatoes for some time previous to that date."

They further say: "After we discontinued business the privilege of using our labels was leased for a period of two years, but this privilege was then discontinued."

Now, it is very evident that according to the statement made here the goods under examination could not have been less than five years old. They may have been canned seven or more years ago. And I question whether tomatoes that have been kept in a can, badly corroded, for this length of time are a fit article of food; and had there been a statement upon the face label it is evident that the public would have been no better informed as to the actual age of the product.

It seems, therefore, to the writer that there should be shown upon the small cap in the centre of the can an indentation, giving the year of the pack. This could not be effaced by any means and the public would be informed as to when the product was put up.

Wholesale arrests of butter dealers by the Allegheny County Retail Merchants' Association are contemplated. The officials of the organization state grocers and others are exposing oleomargarine for sale without it being placarded as such. Some dealers are also selling renovated butter as pure creamery product. Joseph C. Kane, of the North Side, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, is authority for the statement that he has discovered 42 violations of the law regarding the sale of oleomargarine and renovated butter as the result of 50 visits paid to grocery stores in Greater Pittsburg during the past two weeks. He asserts that a number of hotel proprietors have been caught serving oleomargarine instead of butter. The cases have been reported to the State Pure Food Department and it is expected Commonwealth officers will take up the matter.

The Other Macy Cut Price Cases.

Apropos of the right of a manufacturer, as the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. to enjoin a retailer, as the Macy department store, of New York, from selling his product at a ruinously low price, there is much confused discussion among the trade as to the book cases in which the Macy Co. figured, and which were recently decided by the United States Supreme Court.

Two copyright book cases were brought against Macy & Co., who won both of them. In one the Bobbs-Merrill Co. published a novel, copyrighted it and stipulated in a printed notice, but not by contract, that it must be retailed at not less than $1 per copy. Macy & Co. sold it at 89 cents. The other case was identical in fact, but was brought by Charles Scribner's Sons, also publishers, whose copyrighted books Macy & Co. had also sold at cut prices.

In both these cases it was urged by the plaintiffs that the sale at a cut price was a violation of copyright, and the court simply decided that it was not. The two main questions which would dominate were the point of the manufacturer's control over retail prices squarely tried, i. e., 1, was there an agreement not to cut prices, and, 2, if not, is the cut price destroying the manufacturer's business and the manufacturer therefore deserving of equitable relief, were only indirectly touched upon.

The two cases decided are therefore only valuable as authorities under the copyright law.

Santos Coffee's New Role.

Truly the food laws have brought about radical reforms. Touring through suburban Philadelphia a few days ago the writer came upon something which he had never seen before—billboards bearing huge advertisements of a blend of "Dutch Java and Santos Coffee." This is surely a proud day for Santos coffee, for never before has it been exploited to consumers on its merits. Always under another name, usually Mocha, always as a counterfeit, always a fake. And it cannot be denied that were there no food laws Santos would still be masquerading as Mocha, just as it invariably did before food laws were passed.

The remarkable thing about it is that never since the inception of the coffee industry has there been a time when Santos coffee was not just as worthy to stand on its merits as Mocha or any other bean.

A Contemporary's Mistake.

The Omaha "Trade Exhibit" makes a serious mistake in the following paragraph:—

> At the National convention of retail grocers recently held in Boston, one of the most important resolutions adopted was introduced by Delegate Coningham, of Nebraska. It asks Congress to pass a law requiring the date of packing to be placed on all packages of food products offered for sale. These food products are all high enough to entitle the consumer to the best and most wholesome the market affords. As it is now, there is nothing on a package to show whether the contents were packed one month or ten years ago. The result is that any old stuff can be worked off on the consumer and the grocer be perfectly ignorant. This is a matter that should go before Congress and a law passed at the earliest possible date, giving protection alike to the grocer and the customer. The same law should apply to canned goods of every kind and class.

The "Trade Exhibit" must readjust its views. The National Association passed no such resolution as this, but its exact opposite. The resolution actually adopted vigorously opposed the dating plan, and its text is as follows:—

> Whereas, Bills providing that food products shall bear the date of packing have been and still are frequently introduced and considered by the Legislatures of the various States, and
> Whereas, For the reasons hereinafter set forth such measures are deemed by us to be neither necessary nor reasonable nor just, it is hereby
> Resolved, That the members of this association are opposed to the enactment of all State and Federal legislation that shall require the declaration on the label of food products of any kind, of the date, when such articles were prepared or packed.

The Omaha "Trade Exhibit" is the first grocery paper the "Grocery World" has ever known to favor laws which would render unsalable, canned goods packed a year or two ago, despite the fact that such goods are frequently better than and always as good as—so far as age is concerned—goods packed this year.

Kill the Private Brands?

At the Atlantic City convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association the question of manufacturers selling chain stores and retailers' co-operative buying exchanges was brought up and discussed, though it couldn't be said to have been a dominant question.

Certain manufacturers who were asked for their views on the subject informally made a statement which I am advised put a speedy end to the discussion.

One manufacturer in particular, who fairly sells any good customer with the price, said he would be at any time willing to consider the question of cutting off retailers, but if he did he thought the jobbers ought to abolish their private brands.

I stated last week, I think, that practically every jobber maintains private brands in some line or other. Let me venture a prophecy—that if it depends on the elimination of private brands, manufacturers will never in the world cut off chain stores and retail grocers' associations. For wholesale grocers make more money on their private brands than they can possibly do on the average proprietary brand—

Unless the manufacturer of that proprietary brand, as pointed out last week, is willing to set and defend a wholesale and retail price upon it.

The average jobber does not make his private brands—they are packed for him by some manufacturer.

But in many cases the jobber packs as well as sells them. Austin, Nichols & Co., Leggett & Co., R. C. Williams & Co., of New York, all have factories in which they make their own brands of specialties. Sprague, Warner & Co., of Chicago, pack their private brands of canned goods in their own canneries.

Even in Philadelphia several of the jobbers are manufacturers.

Now, as I said last week, and as I emphasize again now, every jobber with a private brand established it for the double purpose of building up a personal business of his own, and getting more profit than he could get on proprietary brands. To ask that the sources of the best profits in the jobbing business be given up is to ask for a heavy sacrifice. Not one jobber out of a thousand would agree to such a thing

And yet it is perfectly equitable for a manufacturer to ask jobbers for some concessions before turning down profitable customers.

A certain manufacturer, let us say, sells all the Philadelphia chain-store concerns and the Retail Grocers' Association. In one case the aggregate business from this source is two cars a week, every cent of which is paid for in cash at the end of ten days.

The local jobbers go to that manufacturer and ask him to cut these concerns off; to compel them to buy their two cars through jobbers.

"But," says the manufacturer. "I'd lose that trade almost absolutely, for they'd get sore on me and knock my goods."

"We'll make it up to you," says the jobber.

"How can you possibly make up two cars or even one car a week to me?" asks the manufacturer.

"We'll push your goods extra hard," says the jobber.

"But look," says the manufacturer, "to make up that much you would have to give me almost all your business. There are two reasons why you can't do that. One is the fact that you're under the same obligations to all my competitors that you are to me—for not selling these people—and you will therefore have to divide your trade up. Second, there are your private brands, on which you make more money than you do on mine."

It's not in the least to be wondered at that so many manufacturers look askance at the jobbers' soapy promises to make up to them the trade they lose by cutting off the large retail buyers.

So that in my judgment the private brands will stay—unless manufacturers generally remove the main necessity for them by limiting the selling price of their brands.

Failures Still Increase.

In Both Grocery and General Store Lines Business Disorders Greater in May, 1908, than in May, 1907. Liabilities, However, Compare Well.

The official list of failures in grocery and general store lines for the month of May, 1908, shows heavy increases over the same month of last year. The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—May, 1908, 143; liabilities, $634,192; May, 1907, 89; liabilities, $624,849.

Grocery Stores.—May, 1908, 230; liabilities, $738,592; May, 1907, 170; liabilities, $933,053.

It will be noted, however, that the liabilities of May, 1907, were greater in the case of the grocery store failures, and almost as great in the general store failures.

American Food Product Manufacturers Neglect South American Fields.

Let European Houses Get Most of the Grocery Trade of Paraguay. United States Seventh in Scale of Countries that Send Foods There. A List of Our Goods that Would Go There.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 11, 1908.

The American Consul says that American manufacturers of food products have been singularly neglectful of the market of Paraguay, South America, and has allowed the manufacturers of Europe to get practically all its grocery trade.

Paraguay imports over half a million dollars' worth of food products a year. Outside of the wheat and flour which come from the Argentine Republic, fully one-half the balance of the trade in foodstuffs is credited to Germany, consisting of rice, canned vegetables and fish, delicatessen products, soups, oatmeal, rice, bean and corn flour. Spain occupies third place, with sales of olives, olive oils, canned vegetables, beans and pickles; and Italy is fourth, supplying olive oils, macaroni and paste products, tomato sauce and preserves.

Fine fruit preserves, fancy canned vegetables, such as asparagus, mushrooms, etc., preserved meats, patés, etc., preserved cheese, jams and biscuits come from France.

The sixth place is held by the United Kingdom, with teas, cocoa, dried fruits, jams, pickles, canned meats, fish and vegetables, hams, bacon, oatmeal and condensed milk, and the United States comes seventh, supplying a very limited line of canned salmon and oysters, deviled ham, cereals, California fruits, corn starch and baking powder. Paraguay has been neglected by American exporters of groceries, who should have a much larger share of this trade than they have at present.

The following American goods, especially, ought to be sold in Paraguay, according to the Consul: Laundry starch, sardines, navy beans, flavoring extracts, baked beans, cheese, canned fruits, dried fruits, prunes, salt codfish, boned codfish, raisins, pickles and table syrups, chocolate, condiments, candies, cocoa, desiccated cocoanut, hams, condensed milk, canned vegetables, bacon, etc.

California canned fruits are not sold in Paraguay to the extent they should be. Jams and preserves are in good demand. Cocoas, chocolate and cheap confectionery are staple goods. American condensed milk is not known here. Dried fruits come from Europe instead of from the United States. American pickles will easily hold their own against the European goods now sold there. Hams and bacon come also from Europe.

Dried fruits for this market should be packed, as for tropical climates, in carefully sealed packages. Hams and bacon should have extra heavy canvas wrappings.

New York Retailers Decide Against Fixing of Retail Price by Manufacturers. More Fines for Benzoate of Soda. East Side Grocers and Hard Times. Chain Store Bankrupt. Fels & Co. Wins Damage Suit.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, June 12, 1908.

The New York Retail Grocers' Union, at its meeting last week, put itself on record against manufacturers fixing a minimum price and also asked that manufacturers discontinue the practice of putting the price on labels and that they cease advertising the selling price in any manner.

A number of the members seemed to think that the minimum price plan could be carried out to advantage in other cities or towns, but that it is not practicable in New York.

According to advices received by the wholesale grocers and manufacturers in this city, the Government will not decide the questions as to the use of benzoate of soda in catsup and sulphur in fruit in time to affect the packing and canning of the present crop, so that the packers will be permitted to use the preservatives, subject to the regulations as to correct labeling and some restrictions as to the quantity of the preservative that is used.

The delay is chiefly on the part of the Commission of Experts appointed by the Government to investigate the scientific and technical questions involved and to report. It is now said that this commission will not submit its recommendations on the issues mentioned until next winter. The packers who use the preservatives are pleased that the situation seems to be clearing for them as far as this year's business is concerned.

Solomon Berg, a wholesale grocer at 77 Essex street, on the East Side, was made a defendant in a bankruptcy case brought by several creditors with claims as follows: B. T. Babbitt, Inc., $135; Bennett, Day & Co., $217; David S. Brown, $443. It is alleged that Berg made a preferential payment of $1,000 and transferred merchandise valued at $1,000. The liabilities are estimated at $24,000 and assets at $4,000. Chas. L. Brookheim was appointed receiver.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed Tuesday against J .H. Wulff, Inc., who have a chain of seven stores on the upper West Side, including one at 167 Amsterdam avenue, and stores on Lenox and Ninth avenues, all in excellent locations. Mr. Wulff started the business in 1899 and last year he incorporated it with a capital stock of $10,000. It is alleged in the petition that the corporation transferred merchandise and accounts to the value of $2,000 and made improper preferential payments to the amount of $3,000. The petitioning creditors and the amounts of their claims are: Shriver & Co., $237; M. W. Houck & Bro., $36; John Boyle Co., $80; Philip Douglas, $180.

Samuel H. Brodie, a grocer at Peekskill, N. Y., filed Monday in this city a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $1,685 and nominal assets of $129.

harder time perhaps than is realized by outsiders. The demands for credit upon these dealers have been unusual and in turn they have depended on the jobber for leniency when they could not meet accounts promptly. Conditions in that part of the city have been exceptional, however. The jobbers say that the conditions generally are much improved over what they were a few weeks ago. It is believed that the number of unemployed has been much reduced and both retailers and wholesalers find collections better than they were.

The International Tobacco Co. claims that the Emil Berger Tobacco Co. is trying to get information as to the former's customers and business methods, and is endeavoring to make use of the courts for the purpose. Louis Berger, a nephew of the principal owner of the Berger company, owns twenty-nine shares of the International company's stock and this week applied to the Supreme Court for permission to examine that company's books. The company opposes the application on the ground stated. Justice Bischoff reserved decision.

The grocers are having their share of outings. The Manhattan and Bronx Retail Grocers' Association held a successful picnic Sunday at Sulzer's Harlem River Park. There was a large attendance and a jolly time with music and field sports. The Brooklyn Retail Grocers' Association will have an excursion next Sunday over the Lehigh Railroad to Bellewood, N. J. Other events are coming.

The breach between the wholesale grocers and the California dried fruit packers was not closed at the recent convention of the wholesalers and considerable trouble over the form of contract is apprehended. The packers have made it clear in the last week that they stand behind the California Dried Fruit Association in its stand for the contract which it submitted to the jobbers. The principal difference is with reference to the clause on terms. The packers insist on the clause which gives a discount if the draft is paid within ten days of shipment and otherwise calls for cash on the arrival of the goods. The jobbers ask that the discount be allowed after the arrival and examination of the goods. The packer objects to the jobber's plan on the ground that it gives the buyer a chance to refuse the shipment on one pretext or another if the market goes down.

A suit brought against Joseph Fels and Samuel S. Fels, the soap manufacturers, by the International Mercantile Marine Co., was dismissed Monday by Judge Adams in the United States District Court. The plaintiff claimed that an explosion on the steamship "Haverford" was caused by the fumes from a shipment of naptha soap and demanded $100-000 as damages. The court held that some other article than soap caused the explosion.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

So far as spot teas are concerned the market is unchanged and comparatively dull. New Japans, which have sold very poorly compared with previous years, have nevertheless advanced 2 cents per pound on the other side. There has been no change here, however, and none is likely in the near future. Certain grades of new Formosas are also ¾ cent higher on the other side. The demand for spot teas is not especially good, and on account of the approaching end of the season many lines are selling at a loss.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very quiet and stupid, speaking now of Rio and Santos. The undercurrent of opinion among the large buying trade is bearish since the sale of valorization coffee last week. To begin with, the price obtained was certainly not more than cost, if that, which makes the future of the syndicate look black, with their enormous stocks and carrying charges galloping on. Then the English monetary influence, which is very strong in Brazil, continues to be strongly adverse to the whole valorization scheme. The future of the cornering syndicate is not as rosy as it might be, and the market is soft in consequence. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Java and Mocha moderately active at ruling prices.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has strengthened during the week, and sales have been made at a slight advance. There would seem to be no reason for the unusual firmness in the market, except it be, as some charge, the fact that the spot stock of raws in New York is really 75,000 tons less than it is represented to be. This is two weeks' supply to the refiners, and if lacking might mean a pinch. Refined sugar is selling actively, but without change in price.

Fish.

The mackerel market is weaker. Norway 3s have declined 50 cents to $1 per barrel. The catch of spring Irish has also shown so much improvement that the price of that grade has also declined about the same amount. New shore mackerel are now offered at $11.50 per barrel, which is much below last year's opening. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged. Prices have been named on new Columbia River salmon during the week on last year's basis. Salmon generally is in fair demand. Domestic sardines are unchanged in price and moderately active. Imported sardines show no change and a fair request.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged, though the corn market is firm and high. Compound syrup is unchanged in price and in light demand. The demand for sugar syrup is good, mostly for export, although the mixers are taking some. Molasses is quiet and unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged and in fair demand. The dry spell is causing some little firmness and spot and future goods are both a little harder to pick up in quantities at the old prices. Corn is unchanged and still firm as to most grades. Shoepeg is not so strong as the other grades, as it was pushed up too high. Maine style is firm; other grades unchanged. The demand is fair only. Peas are still weak and dull, and sales have been made 12½ cents below this year's opening. The pack is about done and amounts to about 80 per cent. of last year so far as the South is concerned. This still means plenty of peas to go round, however. Prospects still indicate a heavy peach crop. Some packers are offering futures below the opening, but the trade seem not to be interested. Apples have advanced 15 to 20 cents per dozen. New York gallons, but the demand is light. In Maryland strawberries are being packed, and though the pack will probably be of good size, the price nevertheless keeps up. The small Baltimore line is unchanged and slow. California canned goods are quiet at ruling prices. There has been no general naming of prices as yet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are doing a little better, so far as the demand is concerned, and in the East 40s are slightly firmer; other grades unchanged. On the coast packers are asking 4-cent basis for new prunes, but the trade refuse to buy at that figure, and no business is doing. Peaches are dull and unchanged in price, though the spot price tends downward. Apricots are dull, both spot

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

and futures; prices unchanged as to both. Currants are fairly active for the season; price unchanged. Raisins are still soft, weak and dull, and will probably not recover this season. Future prices have been named on a basis 1½ cents below last year for fancy seeded. Other dried fruits unchanged and quiet.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans still rule unchanged at last quotations, and business is dull. Imported are moving to some extent around $2.30, the ruling price. Marrows are unchanged and moderately active. California limas are higher again, mostly from speculative reasons. Split and dried peas in all grades are unchanged and in fair demand.

Butter.

The butter market is very active but unchanged. There is a good demand, both speculative and consumptive, and the make is fully up to the standard both in quality and quantity. The weather has been very desirable for making butter, and no special change in prices is looked for during the next few days.

Eggs.

The egg market is fair and unchanged. The receipts are about normal. The quality is showing some heat, so far as the bulk of the receipts are concerned, and these have to be sold at slight concessions. The consumptive demand for eggs is about normal and everything is being absorbed as fast as it arrives.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very active at an advance of about ¼ cent, with other advances likely to follow. The hot spell in New York State is burning the grass, and the farmers are reported to be somewhat put to it for fodder. The make so far has been about normal for the season, and the quality is fancy. Undergrades are very scarce, and if there is any change it will be a slight advance.

Provisions.

The market for smoked meats is unchanged and rules at firm prices. The demand is seasonable. Both pure and compound lard is firm at ¼ cent advance, and the consumptive demand is very good. Barrel pork is unchanged and active. Canned meats and dried beef are firm and unchanged.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1.10 to $1.35 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 cents to $1 per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch, demand fair; red, $1 to $2 per bunch, demand fair; lemons, $2.25 to $3.50 per box, demand fair; apples, Baldwins, $2.50 to $3.50 per barrel, demand fair; pineapples, $2.25 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good; grapefruit, $3.50 to $6 per box, demand fair; California oranges, $3 to $4.25 per box, demand fair to good.

Produce.

Old potatoes, Pennsylvania, 50 to 60 cents per bushel; York State, 70 to 75 cents per bushel, demand poor; Egyptian onions, $2.25 to $2.50 per bag; Texas, $1 to $1.15 per crate; Bermudas, $1.10 per crate, demand fair; sweet potatoes, firsts, $1 to $1.10 per bushel; seconds, 50 to 60 cents per bushel, demand fair; spinach, 50 to 75 cents per barrel, demand poor; rhubarb, $2 per 100 bunches, demand good; white radishes, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches; red, $1.50 per 100 bunches, demand good; scullions, 75 cents to $1 per 100 bunches, demand fair to good; carrots, 4 to 5 cents per bunch, demand good; asparagus, 15 to 20 cents per bunch, demand good; turnips, 50 to 60 cents per basket, demand fair; Jersey peas, 60 to 75 cents per basket, demand good; cauliflower, No. 1, 10 cents per head; No. 2, 2 to 3 cents per head, demand fair; salad, No. 1, $1 per barrel; No. 2, 25 to 50 cents per barrel, demand fair; beets, 2 to 3 cents per head, demand good; Pennsylvania cabbage, $1 to $1.25 per barrel, demand fair.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Products.

By S. S. "Furnessia" arrived a few half-barrels of new Matjes herring. Quality was quite satisfactory and they were sold promptly ex dock.

Owing to heavy losses sustained in previous years on new herring, almost all receivers here have notified their shippers not to forward but small parcels on every steamer so that the market may not be overcrowded. It is hoped that they will continue this practice, and in such case prices are likely to remain quite steady.

Probably in consequence of the comparatively high prices asked for American sardines, the demand for sprats has improved lately, and some round lots have changed hands. The stock of sprats in France and Belgium is very small. Stocks here are concentrated in a few hands and prices are very firm. If demand should continue we look for an advance.

Cable reports from France in regard to the fishing of sardines are very discouraging. There is virtually no catch and no stocks anywhere of French sardines.

Of Portuguese sardines there are only very few parcels in the market, and those are firmly held.

For mackerel there is only a hand-to-mouth demand, but they are beginning to sell better. All in all, the outlook is more encouraging than last week.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Uppermost in the mind of every one in the trade here is the pea problem. The continued rains and the unseasonable weather during the latter part of May did more damage to the pea crop throughout this section than was supposed, and if it had not been for the favorable weather conditions earlier in the season the crop might have been nearly a total failure for canning purpose. The quality is all right, but the quantity is a keen disappointment. Unless the other pea growing sections of the country fare better than we have, this year will not be one of low prices for the canned article for which we had such a bright outlook a few weeks ago. We have yet left, however, two weeks more of the packing season, and we are watching and praying.

Next to peas the strawberry crop has suffered most, and from the same cause, resulting in an immediate advance in the prices of the canned article. Unfavorable reports are coming in about the crop of gooseberries and raspberries, as well as cherries, and they will not be lower in prices. It is too early yet to say anything about blackberries and blueberries. The demand for future peaches is increasing, and if that crop, too, proves to be short, those packers who are selling them may find themselves in an unpleasant position. Up to this time the prospects for a large crop are excellent, the orchards look fine and carry healthy looking fruit. Nothing positive, however, can be told about peaches until after the June drop, which is just beginning. The pineapple season is fully up to the mark, the receipts to date were as large as usual and the quality is excellent, and in the meantime the demand is increasing.

New string beans are ready for prompt shipment. The demand for corn is making a stronger market for that article, and conservative purchases are advisable. Spinach, pears and apples are in fair demand, as usual at this time.

Spot tomatoes were not so active this week, and there was less doing in futures. The market is liable to fits of sudden activity or unexpected dullness always during the month of June.

THOS. J. MEEHAN & CO.
Baltimore, Md.

No. 2.

The tomato market has been showing some snap this week. There has been considerable buying on a basis of 72½ cents per dozen, and a great deal of business turned down. It looks as though the sellers at 72½ cents per dozen have been cleaned out. Good Standard No. 3 tomatoes can be bought at 75 cents per dozen, but this is bottom on them.

The stock of tomatoes being carried in this section is undoubtedly comparatively light, and quite a few conservative people seem to think that all the tomatoes in first hands will go out before the new season. This is based on the better demand and on the indications that jobbers in some sections of the country are bare of tomatoes and will want quite a few before the new packing season.

We are quoting No. 2 and No. 3 Standards at 55 and 75 cents per dozen, f. o. b. Baltimore rate. The demand is fair, though not active. Packers are not pressing sales at all. The majority of them seem to think that 75 cents per dozen is not profitable on a basis of prospective cost.

The packing of peas has been going on unsatisfactory this week. Packers are not getting the peas they anticipated. It may be a little too early to say that there will be a short crop, but this is the way most of the packers feel about it.

There is some improvement in the buying of future peaches. A limited number of Baltimore packers are willing to book orders for futures, but the majority of them are inclined to stand pat and wait until the packing season begins.

Spices.

The market is firmer; spot supplies are steadily decreasing. Futures are fairly active, although there has been no large trading during the week.

Pepper steady, at about the same values as have been in effect during the last thirty days.

Cayennes.—We note a better inquiry and some light buying. Purchases will be heavier during the next thirty days.

Cloves scarce and firmer. The new crop is estimated at 75,000 to 85,000 bales, about one-half of the 1907 crop. If this estimate is correct we will see a higher market.

Pimento (Allspice) firm for spot goods. New crop is somewhat lower.

Mace.—Prime stock is scarce; demand is fair.

Nutmegs.—There has been fair buying at present low prices, which, by the way, are lowest on record.

Cassias.—Saigon is in better demand; prices firm. China also in good demand for spot and for goods to arrive. Prices steady, but unchanged.

Gingers.—Firmer prices are tending upward. Demand is fair.

Seeds steady. Much higher prices for Caraway, Holland having advanced on old as well as new crop seed. Celery is firm, but unchanged.

MCCORMICK & CO.
Baltimore, Md.

MARKET NOTES.

Watermelons range from 25 to 35 cents each. All are from Florida and the quality is very fine. The demand is fair.

Lima beans are scarce. The receipts are from Charleston and the average price $2.50. The quality of much of the receipts is poor.

Strawberries are in very heavy receipt, and the price ranges from 3 to 7 cents. All the fruit now on the market is from near-by points. Huckleberries range from 12 to 15 cents, and blackberries from 10 to 12 cents, both coming from North Carolina. The demand is fair.

Peaches now coming forward are nearly all Georgias and range from $1.25 to $2. A few Floridas range from $1.50 to $1.60.

Mississippi tomatoes have declined to 60 to 65 cents. Lots are coming, many poor. Floridas bring $2 for the best.

Florida corn is scarce and averages $2 per crate. The quality is poor and the demand slow.

Florida pineapples average $3 for 24s, and $2.50 to $2.75 for 30s and 36s. The demand is fair.

BOOMING THE VEGETABLE BUSINESS.

Beginning Monday 50 cards will be mailed to hotel men, restaurant men and boarding house keepers quoting prices in original packages (largely) of all fresh vegetables. Occasionally we will put in a special on canned goods, and once in a while a low price on a short loin or a full rib or a set of racks. These cards are in every case to be presented when the purchase is made and you will hand them in at the office. This will be kept up for six weeks. If the experiment proves a success we will follow it up with vigor.

ODD JARS.

All the odd quart and pint jars that we have will be bunched together and sold for 50 cents a dozen. You'll find Smalley's, Lightning's, Mason's, Morgan's and other kinds. Get rid of them.

ABOUT HIGHER MEAT PRICES.

Certainly the price of cattle has gone unreasonably high. The thing to do is to dig into your canned meats and your delicatessen goods and talk fresh fish to people. Fish prices are low. Follow up our talk on this department and get the prices down so you can quote them off-hand.

DILL PICKLES.

We have a lot of Dill pickles on hand. Evidently we bought too many. Anyway, we must move them and move them quickly, because it's a pickle that won't stand the hot season. Make a display in a three-gallon punch bowl with a ticket "12 for 15 cents." Surround the display with Dill, also pint and quart oyster pails. Keep the brine free from white spots.

"PINK" SALMON.

Remember one thing about selling 10-cent 1s of salmon, and that is the color is off. Let this be understood when the sale is made. Red Alaska can't be sold with a profit for less than 15 cents. The other (the pink) can be sold for 10 cents. The flavor is O. K. The color is objectionable. It makes lots of trouble for us and you must exercise the utmost care in explaining to people the nature of this fish. Do this especially with children and men who are sent after "a can of salmon." Understand?

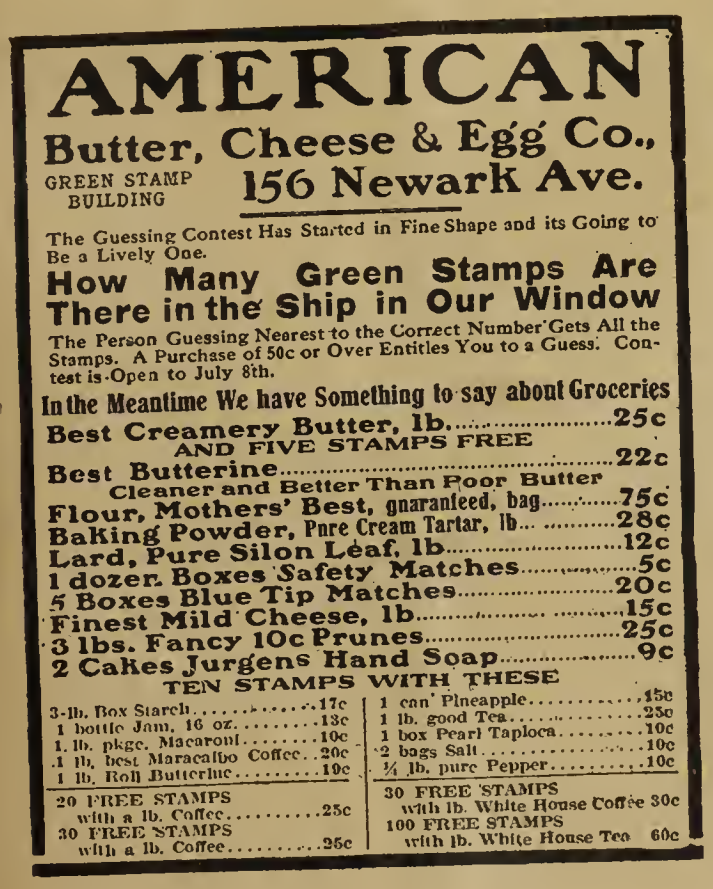
Big Fight Over Increased Butter Freights.

Sixteen of the largest butter manufacturers in the Mississippi Valley States will begin a gigantic battle against 20 transcontinental railroads and express companies within the next few days before Interstate Commerce Commissioners Prouty, of Vermont, and Harlan, of Illinois, in Chicago, in an effort to thwart the common carriers' plan to make a sweeping advance in rail tariffs on milk and cream, averaging from 66⅔ to 125 per cent. It is the emphatic claim of these makers of butter that the enforcement of the proposed "excessive, unjust and practically confiscatory" increase not only would imperil the investment of $10,000,000 in creamery plants in several States, but would eliminate the net profit of less than one-half a cent per pound on the finished product and force the creameries to suspend business. The annual production of the petitioning butter-makers who seek the permanency of protection from railroad rate increases temporarily given by an injunction issued by Judge Kohlsaat, of the United States Circuit Court in September, 1907, is 150,000,000 pounds, which is more than one-quarter of the total output of the United States. These petitioners annually pay the farmers of Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Minnesota and Indiana $50,000,000 for cream, and expend more than $1,500,000 on railroad freight charges. Counsel for the defendant common carriers have offered the suggestions that the butter-makers add the increase due to the proposed new tariff on cream to the selling price of the finished product. But the makers unanimously have decided not to compel the public to pay more for the necessity. The suggestion is denounced as unfair to the people, and likely to result in extensive reprehensible substitution and adulteration.

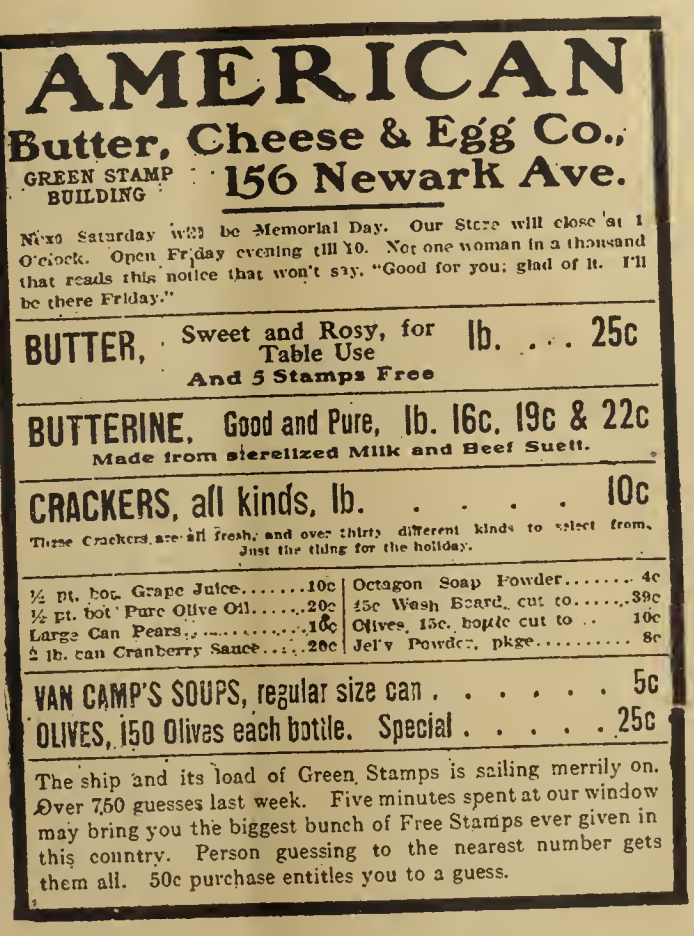
Now is the time to get your stock in proper condition for the season's work or the sale. A lame, blemished horse can be made sound and smooth with Absorbine without laying up the horse. No blister, no hair gone. Absorbine is mild, but prompt in its action; stops lameness, kills pain, removes bunches. Two dollars per bottle at all druggists, or express prepaid upon receipt of price. Manufactured only by W. F. Young, P. D. F., 9 Monmouth street, Springfield, Mass.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.



New York, June 2, 1908.



Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—What are the faults of the inclosed advertisements? I claim the name of the concern is featured too prominently—it should appear at the bottom of the advertisement.

Yours truly,
SALESMAN.
R. C. Williams & Co.

The above correspondent inclosed two advertisements, both of which measured five inches double column. Here they are, both photographed in reduced size:—

In my judgment the correspondent is right as to the featuring of the name. It belongs at the bottom, and even when placed there should not be given anything like the space that has been given it here. In my judgment it is an unanswerable argument that if the values exploited in an advertisement are attractive enough the people will find the name and address, even if it is set in the smallest type known. Naturally there is advertising strength in keeping the name before the public, and for that reason I would not set it in the smallest type known. To make it the biggest thing in the advertisement, however, is equivalent to contending that the name is more important than the goods, which is illogical and absurd.

The advertisement beginning "How Many Green Stamps are There in the Ship, etc.," contains about twice too much matter. It is fearfully crowded and for that reason is a poor advertisement. I should have cut down the space given to the name, about half, put it at the bottom, and then advertised about half as many articles. Leave space enough to say something about the goods. In all this advertisement there isn't a single word of explanation, description or persuasion. Nothing but names and prices.

The other advertisement is nowhere near so crowded, and for that reason is a much better advertisement. Even it, however, could stand fewer articles and more persuasion. I notice one tendency in both these advertisements which seems to sooner or later overtake everybody who uses trading stamps—the tendency to treat the stamps as of more importance than the goods. In other words, to assume that the customer thinks more of stamps than of groceries. If a dealer does this long enough he will find that he has educated his customer to do that, and he'll regret it to his dying day. Trading stamps may be all right, but they should never be treated in any other way than as a side issue.

JOTS FROM A JOBBER'S NOTEBOOK.

A number of first-hands handlers of food products have found this year that is is an easier thing to put prices up than it is to get them down again, at least to get them down and get back the trade that came before the advance. For example, French mushrooms. As has been reported in the "Grocery World" several times, I think, the price has ruled very high for several months, reaching at one time $30 per case for hotel mushrooms. Scarcity was assigned as the reason, but the fact was that intrinsically the goods were not worth $20. The demand for that reason fell off very decidedly, and a good part of the trade used fresh mushrooms, which were actually cheaper. Now, in common with most other things, the price of mushrooms has declined about $3 a case, but the trade has not yet come back, and probably will not for a long, long time. The manufacturer who concludes that his goods are indispensable, and that the trade will pay whatever price is asked is likely to wake up with a sore head sooner or later. The packers of California products are among those who now realize this.

Peas keep high, ranging from 40 to 65 cents. The crop is light. The demand is good.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

When you blend your own coffee the dog you try it on is your own customers—that's risky; the dog may bite.

A perfect blend of superfine coffee. For the very finest trade.

Treating Manufacturers as They Deserve Pays

Well-known New Jersey Grocer Tells of Experiences with Oil Trust and Biscuit Trust. Wouldn't Stand Their Methods and Bought of Independent Concerns, to Both His Own and His Customers' Advantage. Urges Retailers to Hold Up Their Heads Like Men.

Personally, I believe in the independence of the American Grocer. Spell it with a capital, won't you, and believe that if he knew his business and felt his importance in the community as he should manufacturers would not dictate to him as they do. Neither would he have "to black people's shoes," as poor old "Stroller" says we do "to keep 'em coming to the store." Why, I don't hesitate to say every once in a while right out to my customers that I consider a well kept grocery store is just as much a necessity to their comfort and happiness in life, and the well being of any community, as they are a necessity to the store itself.

Let us put on our Sunday clothes every once in a while and ride out in our automobiles, and pleasantly nod to such of our customers as we pass on the road, and see if we don't come home feeling bigger and better and more like "fighting" some of these "sassy" manufacturers than ever, and see also if they aren't a whole lot more gracious to us on account of it.

I very well remember the time when I first dared to buy kerosene oil from an opponent of the "Standard Oil Co." In talking to the oldest storekeeper of the town about it he said he'd be awfully afraid he wouldn't be able to get oil when he needed it, "for certainly, said he, they won't sell it to you when once you have turned your back on them. The result of my "boldness" may be known when I tell you that during the first six days after "I dared" to buy from a competitor I had no less than seven different men, employees of the Standard, in my store urging me to come back to their fold, and finally I found I could buy both oil and gasoline from them much cheaper than I had ever done before, and cheaper they told me than anyone else in the town was getting it.

So with the National Biscuit Co. They were charging me cake prices for old pasteboard, etc., to which I objected. As long as I only did this they did not care and tried to whitewash me. Finally I left them entirely and, my customers tell me, secured better goods from a competitor, when lo the tide turned and more gracious letters and visitors I never received than such as were sent me by the same biscuit company agreeing to do almost any old thing I wanted them to do if I would only let them have my trade again.

Suffice it to say neither the National Biscuit Co. nor the Standard Oil Co. have either directly or indirectly had $20 of my money in the last ten years, and I am sure I have been served better during that time than I ever was before.

If I could get along so well without these people, I guess I can without the Quaker Oats people. Not that I have any desire for a fight with anybody, far from it, but I am an American citizen and can and will hold my head up with any of them, and insist that the man that gets my money shall not try to cut my throat when he gets it.

Let every retail grocer in the whole country take the same stand and hold his head up where it belongs, and see if he does not feel better and receive more credit than he does while fearing to call his soul his own as so many now do.

How the Old Man Got Back.

I think if there's any trait of character stronger about me than the others, it's the fact that I have no use for injustice.

If I can see somebody who's been handed a rough deal, get back and go one better I sing myself to sleep for a month.

I don't mean the mean sense of getting square, or getting revenge. I mean simply putting up a good defense and beating.

Away back in the 90's I knew an old grocer down in the southern part of Pennsylvania. He was sixty then, and I used to believe he was pretty well fixed. His store was in a small place, but it used to get a lot of trade from the country and had been in the same family for a long time. By the swads of goods the old fellow used I figured out that he did a big business.

I lost sight of the old fellow several years ago. I was sorry, too, for I always liked him. He had no education that amounted to anything, but was good and sound; a man nobody could help liking.

The other day I met a salesman who filled in that part of the history of the old fellow which has happened since I lost sight of him. It made me feel so good that I sat right down and wrote him a letter. The next time I get anywhere near there you can bet I'll run out and see him again.

The old man had three sons. Nothing remarkable about any of 'em, but their father thought there was. He believed the sun rose and set in 'em.

I never could see how he could feel that way, because there have never been any remarkable children born except my two. That's confidential, of course.

But he did, and he used to talk about how he was building up the business for his boys, and how after he got old he was going to turn it over to 'em.

Each one, when he got old enough, he took into the store with him. Oh, yes, the business was big enough. One man told me once he did over a thousand dollars a week.

About ten years ago the young fellows got so father was in the way. He was a fine man, and a good father, and we love him dearly, but his views about business are old-fashioned. You know the old song. Of course it isn't his fault, you know, father's always lived here in this little place, and his ideas naturally belong to the town. Why, confidentially, if we had this business to ourselves we could, etc., etc., etc. Can't you just hear them going on?

The old father was no fool and he saw what they thought about him. And it hurt a good bit. They didn't mean to make him uncomfortable, but they used to get impatient at things that he did, and there was some little friction and unpleasantness.

You see, the old man was conservative. Anybody's conservative who spends his life in a country town. The conservatives may not get as rich as some of the other fellows, but they usually hold on to what they've got anyway.

Some of the radicals don't.

Well, to make a long story short, the boys finally came out with a flat proposition that the old man should make over the store to them. They didn't put it badly—he was getting old, and didn't need to work, and he'd always said he was going to give them the business anyway, and this was the time to do it.

But he saw through it, and didn't know whether to do it or not. "Mother" thought he ought to do it, and finally he did.

The minute the three boys got possession of the place they turned it inside out. Before that it was a good, prosperous old-fashioned country store; after that it was neither one thing nor the other, for they tacked on a lot of new ideas that didn't fit.

And it didn't do the business any good. The people of that section were essentially country people. They very seldom got to any big city and they didn't take well to city things. There was one other grocery store in the place—a smaller store, and the people began to go there.

The old man was wild! The fellow that gives me this information tells me he was more worked up about it than he'd ever been over anything in his whole life. He talked to the boys, and argued with them, and kicked and pleaded and roasted, but nothing doing. The sons knew it all—the trade would soon see and come back—and they were going to try it out anyway.

The old fellow waited a month or two longer, to see if things would get better, and when they didn't what d'ye think he did?

He started a new store of his own right across from the old one. By that time the country paper had got hold of it and it printed the whole thing. To help it along the sons weren't liked much while the father was.

The new place did business from the start, and it went right ahead. It was just a country store like the old man knew the people of the country wanted, and 50 per cent. of 'em went to it in preference to the old store.

The sons were as bitter as the mischief and did a lot of talking, which helped their father but not them. Finally, when the thing began to look serious, they went to their father with their tails down and wanted to talk things over.

The old man wouldn't listen to a thing unless they'd agree to make over the store to him again, take their old jobs back, and let him do the running without any more monkey business. They wouldn't agree right away, but at last they did, and the two stores were consolidated. The old man stepped back where he was before, and everybody's happy.

By gravy, but that does make me feel good! Hurrah for the old man!

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

"Picnic" Window.

A window display that strongly suggests itself at the present time is a "Picnic" window.

It is distinctly seasonable and would prove to be an effective, while economical, advertisement for the goods displayed.

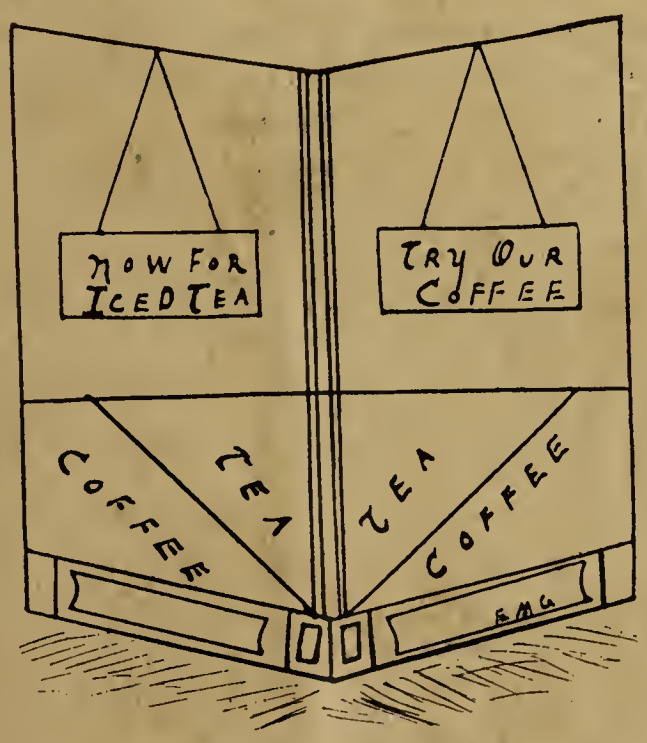
Cover the floor with green crepe paper. At either corner, in the back of the window, pile carton cakes and crackers in the shape of a concave pyramid.

In the middle, at the back, pile olives, gherkins, etc. On either side of this pyramid pile sardines exactly the same way, only not so high.

In the centre of the window spread a table cloth on the floor. In the centre of this place a basket, covered or not, apparently filled with "good things to eat." Then place, here and there on the cloth, a bottle of catsup, mustard, peanut butter, olives, box of butter thins, eral strings of butter thins, Zu-Zu, etc.

A more elaborate and decidedly more effective display would be to cut grass sods and place in the bottom of the window.

It would also be advisable to pin price tags on the various articles displayed.



LAWRENCE A. GIPP.
Wilmington, Del.

A Corner Store Window.

The illustration represents a corner grocery with a double window on the corner. This window can be made more attractive than the common square or bulk window.

Cover the floor with any kind of clean paper, or if the floor is already covered with oilcloth, paper is not needed.

Let the corner at the intersection of the street be the hub, then radiating from the hub like the spokes in a wagon wheel, place canned plates (wooden), knives and forks, etc. Make a rather tempting spread.

On either side of the cloth, at the front, pile pyramids of canned meat products, potted ham, etc.

On either side, at the back, pile cans of salmon.

Around the front of the window place bottled goods—gherkins, etc. Along the sides place picnic hams. From the top of the window suspend two strings of hams and sevgoods, cereals in packages, or, better still, package tea and coffee (as this is to be a tea and coffee window) several layers high, so as to form a partition. Then between each partition fill the space with coffee on the outside and tea in the centre, or alternate either way.

Place neat price marks on the different kinds, also suspend cards from the ceiling with the inscription on one:—

Western Grocers Join Freight Rate Fight.

Application for an injunction is being prepared to restrain transcontinental railway lines from advancing the rates from the Pacific coast to the Missouri River and from the Utah common points to the Missouri River, by the Missouri River Whole sale Grocers' Association, which has members in Kansas City, St. Joseph, Omaha and Sioux City. The petition will be filed in all probability in Federal court at Kansas City or Omaha. It will ask that the roads be restrained from putting into effect the tariffs filed by R. H. Countiss, agent of the Transcontinental Freight Association, May 22d, and effective July 10th. These tariffs show an advance of 10 cents from Pacific coast points to the Missouri jobbing centres, advancing the rate from 50 cents per 100 to 60 cents on sugar. Another advance proposed is from Utah points, the advance being 10 cents per 100, from 35 to 45 cents. If the rates become effective those to Missouri River points from Utah and from the Pacific coast will be on the same basis as from the Western points to Chicago and the Mississippi River. Notice from the Transcontinental Freight Association that the advance would be made came to the Omaha whole sale grocers just at a time when it was believed that the railroads were doing their best to assist the Missouri River cities in developing trade.

Atlantic City Convention Adopts Resolutions Against It, on Ground of Injury to Retail Trade. Also Declares Against Printing Retail Price on Package. Officers of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association for Ensuing Year.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Atlantic City, N. J.,
June 9, 1908.

The closing day of the convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association was mainly devoted to the election of officers and the adoption of resolutions. The following officers and directors were elected:—

President, Wm. Judson, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

First Vice-President, F. W. Hannahs, of Newark, N. J.

Second Vice-President, Theodore Whitmarsh, of New York City, N. Y.

Third Vice-President, O. B. McGlasson, of Chicago, Ill.

Treasurer, Frank A. Potter, of New York City, N. Y.

Directors, W. B. Timms, of New York; E. H. Sayre, of New York; Chas. Groben, of Buffalo, N. Y.; E. F. Brewster of Rochester, N. Y.; S. B. Steele, of Chicago, Ill.; Henry Horner, of Chicago; D. H. Bethard, of Peoria, Ill.; W. N. Todd, of Leavenworth, Kan.; A. M. Wilson, of Hartford, Conn.; Wm. Y. Wadleigh, of Boston, Mass.; Jno. Kelly, of St. Paul, Minn.; T. H. Greene, of Minneapolis, Minn.; C. L. Hare, of Indianapolis, Ind.; E. G. Scudder, of St. Louis, Mo.; C. B. Raymond, of Kansas City, Mo.; Fred. R. Drake, of Easton, Pa.; Robert G. Bursk, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Maj. Samuel Mahon, of Ottumwa, Iowa; W. C. McConaughey, of Parkersburg, W. Va.; F. B. Milliken, of Portland, Me.; Jno. S. Brady, of McCord, Omaha, Neb.; A. S. Musselman, of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Gilbert W. Lee, of Detroit, Mich.; P. C. Dresher, of Sacramento, Cal.; M. A. Newkirk, of Los Angeles, Cal.; Chas. Hatfield, of Denver, Col.; Henry Powers, of Paris, Ky.; Albert Mackey, of New Orleans, La.; John Schoenwalf, of Baltimore, Md.; George Apple, of Portsmouth, Ohio; W. H. Goldsmith, of Seattle, Wash.; S. S. McClintock, of Spokane, Wash.; L. M. Spencer, of Portland, Ore.

A resolution was adopted at the morning session agreeing to give preference in business transactions to such brokers as were members of the National Canned Goods and Dried Fruit Brokers' Association.

Secretary John A. Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, addressed the convention also on the need for co-operation among the wholesalers and retailers.

The following resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, In our struggle during the past two years to procure the passage by State Legislatures of food laws uniform with that of the United States, we have found that State Legislatures frequently failed to apprcciate the need of the business community for harmony of action upon laws affecting matters of common interest; be it therefore

Resolved, That the National Wholesale Grocers' Association hereby publicly acknowledges its appreciation of the great service rendered to the cause of harmony of action by State Legislatures and ultimate uniform legislation of matters of common interest by the President of the United States in calling together the Governors of the different States, and also to express the hope and conviction that the council of Governors will realize and employ the vast power for good that lies within its organization.

Fourth.—Whereas, The National Association of Retail Grocers adopted at their annual convention the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the National Association of Retail Grocers urges upon all of the manufacturers of the United States who market their goods under proprietary brands or trade-marks the wisdom of the policy of establishing and maintaining by contract a reasonable profit at which their goods shall be sold, such profit to be regulatcd according to the trade conditions in the different localities.

We are opposed to any prices being printed upon the package; therefore, be it

Resolved, We express our approval and support of the policy as set forth in the above resolution and that a copy of this resolution be supplied to all manufacturers of proprietary brands in the United States.

Fifth.—Whereas, The extremely divcrse and conflicting statutes and decisions of the several States upon the subject of the issuance and use and interpretation of bills of lading leads to much expensive and unnecessary litigation among shippers, bankers and railroads;

Resolved, That the National Wholesale Grocers' Association favors National and State legislation designed so far as possible to require the use of the bill of lading throughout the United States and imposing a penalty for the issuance of any bill of lading before the receipt of the goods or the surrender and cancellation of any bill of lading without the actual delivery of the goods.

Sixth.—Whereas, We believe that an exchange of ideas among officers of State and district associations would be of great benefit both to organizations and the members of the National organization; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we ask this convention to authorize a provision in the annual programme for a conferance of the official representatives of the various States and district associations.

Seventh.—Whereas, An amendment of our postal laws, establishing a parcels post has been and is being advocated before Congress, and

Whereas, The passage of such a law would change and utterly disrupt the established method and channels for the distribution of all commodities, in package form, and would seriously injure and jeopardize the life and existence of the retail merchant; therefore

Resolved, That we are bitterly opposed to the establishing of a parcels post, and urge the members of this association to usc their influence in opposing the proposed amendment of our postal laws.

Eighth.—Whereas, The manufacturers' representatives in the different centres have formed associations for the purpose of correcting trade abuses with which they and ourselves have to contend; therefore

Resolved, That we extend them our best wishes for their success and assure them that we will be glad to co-operate in promoting all reasonable measures for our mutal benefit.

Further resolved, That we declare our loyalty to those manufacturcrs who recognize the wholesale grocers as the legitimate channel through which their respective products shall be distributed.

Further resolved, That the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States favors the adoption of uniform laws throughout the United States upon the subjects of food control, bills of lading, negotiable instruments, and all other subjects of common commercial interest.

Tenth.—As this is the first meeting of this association since the convention of representatives of the principal service, commercial, industrial, banking and labor organizations of the country with prominent political and Government economists under the auspices of the National Civic Federation in Chicago in October, 1907; and

Whereas, That important and representative gathering, after thorough discussion and consideration, unanimously recommended the amendment to the Sherman Anti-Trust Law so as to permit commercial agreements that are not in unreasonable restraint of trade.

Resolved, That this association, although not in favor of some of the provisions of the proposed Hepburn measure, introduced at the last session of Congress, to amend the Sherman Law, nevertheless approves of the general recommendation of that Chicago convention.

Eleventh.—Resolved, That we affirm our loyalty to the principles as set forth in our constitution and by-laws regarding free deals and we view with satisfaction the recognition of the justness of our position by those manufacturers who have expressed a desire to allow the jobber ample compensation for handling the same.

Twelfth.—Resolved, That the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States is opposed to the enactment by Congress or by State Legislatures of measures requiring that the labels of food products of any kind shall bear the date of packing, a statement of the weight or measure or a list of the ingredients and percentages.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Wichita, Kan.

The Wichita (Kan.) Retail Grocers' Association has had cards printed and distributed among the grocers to guard against the public being so careless with gasoline and oil. The cards are to notify the public that no gasoline will be put in a bottle, jar, can or any vessel of any kind that is not painted red and no oil in a vessel that is so painted.

Pie cherries are abundant and range from 3 to 5 cents per pound. The demand is good.

"A Delicious Drink"

That remark is frequently made concerning Café des Gourmets Coffee and you will have it said to you just as soon as you get your trade to give it a trial.

Café des Gourmets is so nearly a perfect blend of high-grade coffees that it appeals to all who like good coffee. It is packed in one-pound, air-tight, handsomely labeled cans that protects the coffee from contamination and prevents the loss of its aromatic flavor for an indefinite time.

Nothing will appeal so strongly to your trade as Café des Gourmets; it costs you 25 cents a pound.

Coffee Blend.

Washington, D. C.,
June 3, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—What other coffee besides Mocha can I mix with Java and have a good drink at 20 cents per pound?

What other kinds of coffee can I mix together and the amount of each to the pound that I can retail at the above-mentioned price?

I remain,
Yours truly,
* * *.

If in the first question the intention is to buy at wholesale at 20 cents, it would be difficult to find a blend with any appreciable Java in it at that price. A blend of half Java at 24 cents per pound roasted, and half Bogota at 18 cents would serve very well, but the aggregate wholesale cost would be 21 cents per pound. Or a blend of Java at 24 cents and Mocha seed Santos at 12 cents would give fair results, at a wholesale cost of 18 cents.

Answering the second question, a straight Mocha seed Santos at 12 cents wholesale, roasted, would probably suit the average consumer better at 20 cents retail than a blended coffee.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Turmeric.

It consists of the ground rhizome or root of the Curcuma longa, an East Indian plant of the same family as ginger. It is also grown in China and the Archipelago, both for native consumption and for export. The roots are long palmate tubers, distinguished respectively as round and long turmeric, and are of a deep orange color inside. They are often badly worm-eaten, but the odor and taste is aromatic, not unlike common ginger, and when chewed it tinges the saliva yellow. The actual coloring matter is called Curcumen. Turmeric is a condiment as well as a dye, and when ground to an orange red powder is used as a stimulating seasoning. It is the principal ingredient in Indian curries, and is the favorite coloring substance used in making mustard compounds, pudding spice, chow chow, pickles, etc.

Valencia Almonds.

A sweet variety, somewhat similar to Jordan almonds, but shorter and broader, being from ½ inch to ¾ inch long, with dark dusty skins.

Valencia Raisins.

A very popular kind of raisins, which derive their name from the province in Spain where they grow.

They are cured by dipping the ripe bunches of grapes into a hot lye, prepared of wood ashes, oil, and salt, and afterwards the raisins are finally dried in the sun.

There is a stoneless variety of these fruit, rather smaller in size, but no great quantity of these come to this country.

Vanilla.

Vanilla plants are a genus of trailing or climbing orchids, of which the species known as Vanilla planifolia is by far the most valuable for producing the fragrant vanilla pods or beans of commerce.

Its home is in Central America and Mexico, but it also grows in various parts of the West Indies and in the Fiji Islands, merely requiring a mean temperature of 75 to 80 degrees.

It bears greenish-yellow flowers mixed with white, followed by slender three-lobed pods 8 or 10 inches long, and a quarter or half an inch in diameter, which are dark green at first, but are curved and yellow when fully ripe.

These pods are filled with pulp and minute black oily seeds, like iron filings, and when gathered emit an aromatic odor so powerful as to often intoxicate those who climb the trees to pick them.

When dried in the sun the pods turn to dark brown, or almost black, and shrink to about a quarter their original bulk.

They are usually tied in bundles of 50 to 100, and either wrapped in tinfoil or packed in tin boxes.

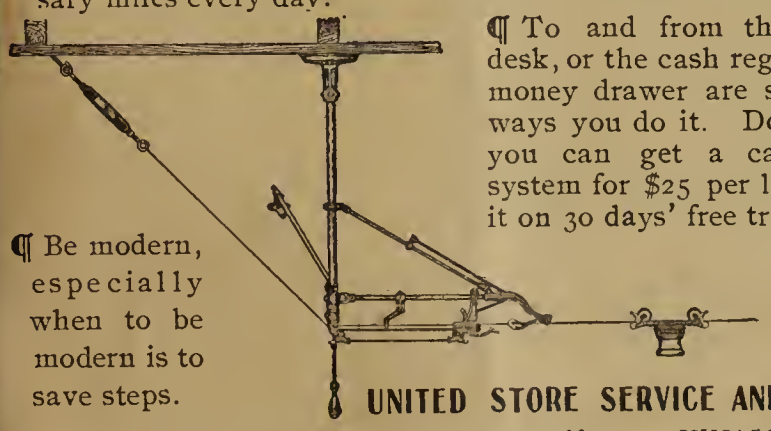
Don't Throw Your Profits in the Cellar



A little of this and a little of that, left after the rush is over, is often put in the cellar because there isn't enough of it to make a respectable showing. These little "leftovers" represent your profits and you can't afford to let them rot in the cellar. A very little looks a lot in my Bins and you can get money for it. As I make them, they go to you from me at the one profit.

H. F. HEACOCK, 51 N. Second St., Phila., Pa.

You Walk Unnecessary Miles

¶ If your store is like many you and your clerks travel unnecessary miles every day.

¶ To and from the cashier's desk, or the cash register, or the money drawer are some of the ways you do it. Do you know you can get a cash-carrying system for $25 per line, and get it on 30 days' free trial?

¶ Be modern, especially when to be modern is to save steps.

Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Cooking Canned Corn

The succulence of canned corn, of course, depends in a measure on the quality of the corn in the beginning; but it depends as much, if not more, on the cooking.

ONARGA COUNTRY GENTLEMAN corn is cooked by the new automatic process which cooks the edges and the center equally, evenly and just enough. The old processes, to completely cook the center, always overcooked the edges.

That is why ONARGA corn is uniformly white and uniformly tender. You'll see the instant you open a can.

IROQUOIS CANNING CO.

ONARGA, ILLINOIS

If you could see some brands of rennet made, you'd never offer them to your customers in a thousand years!

Filthy, unclean and nasty! We wouldn't sell such rennet if we had to work in the streets!

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet is guaranteed to be perfectly and absolutely clean. It's the best in other ways, too—strongest, purest and most profitable.

It makes you 100 per cent.

Increased Profits and Large Sales Spell S-U-C-C-E-S-S

Rolled Oats is one of your big sellers; big profits on your big sellers is what counts.

Figure what your percentage is on Mother's Oats at 12 cents, and add the ½ of a cent net profit on all coupons you redeem. Then remember that you can't sell your customers an oat product 'just as good' as Mother's Oats, and we believe you will realize that it is going to pay you to push Mother's Oats just as hard as you can.

YOUR DUTY IS TO TELL HER

Suppose your customer does ask for Trust Starch, is it your duty to give it to her without telling her that Murdoch's Corn or Laundry Starch is better?

Don't you owe it to her to give her the very best—to tell her if she thinks she is getting the best when she isn't?

Murdoch's Corn and Laundry Starches are the finest products of their class extant. We go to trouble in making them perfect, which other manufacturers tell us is ridiculous.

But that's the kind of a foundation we're laying for this business.

Oswego Maize Products Company

OSWEGO, NEW YORK

What the 99 Do

We could probably count a hundred silver polishes, Electro-Silicon and ninety-nine others. The ninety-nine combined probably haven't half as much business as Electro-Silicon alone.

Considering how easy it is to make a "silver polish" it means a whole lot when one silver polish forges so far ahead of its competitors as Electro-Silicon.

It means the results of the enormous advertising we have done, of course, but more than that it means that Electro-Silicon is better.

The advertising we have done and are doing makes business for you as well as for us. No other silver polish is so well known, no other is so easy to sell, no other will please your customers so well.

Always packed in yellow box bearing lady in red.

MARKED "ENTERPRISE"

Grocers who are posted will not accept a Coffee Mill unless it bears the name "ENTERPRISE." The excellence of the grinders has been proven by many years' efficient service. The strength of their construction cuts out the expense of repairs, and the beauty of their finish makes them an ornament in the store. Get our catalogue at once, illustrating every desirable kind of Rapid Grinding and Pulverizing Mills, from the smallest hand mills up to the most powerful electrically driven mills.

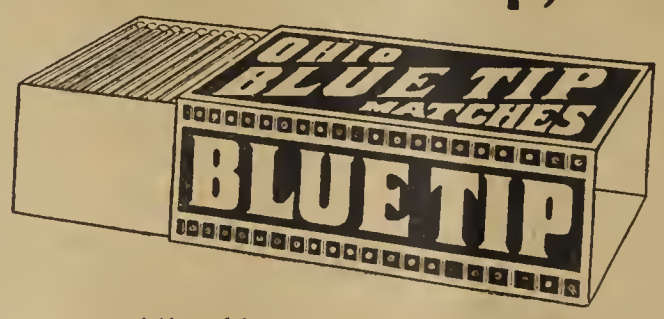
Appetizing Mustard Sardines

A tender, toothsome sardine, discriminatingly selected, carefully dried and fried, and then packed in a delicious high grade mustard dressing. Both the fish and the can are somewhat larger than in our oil sardines.

Our Mustard Sardines are far above the average domestic sardines and will instantly please even the most fastidious.



Swift & Company

Pearl Borax Soap Powder is as superior to other powders as Pearl Borax Soap is to other soaps. Wrappers and box fronts redeemed for gifts.

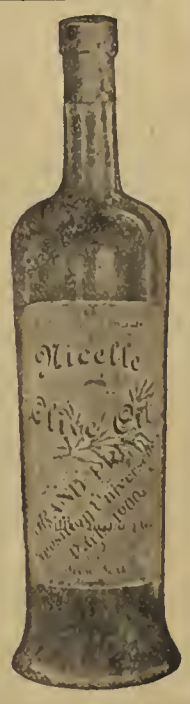
Fix= tures That Sell Goods

Store Fixtures are not inaminate things, that is, they ought not to be—they have a real selling ability. Take this 5-jar fixture for pickles, olives or anything that will go in a jar. Comes either in oak or cherry, nickel trimmings. Finely made and handsome.



Convenient, sightly and a real help in the sale of goods. Surprisingly moderate in price.

U. S. GOVERNMENT INSPECTION OF ALL OUR GOODS

Be Proud of Your Olive Oil

You may remember the recent tests which the United States Government made into all brands of imported olive oil.

Those tests (Government Bulletin 77, page 55) proved Nicelle Olive Oil to be superior to all the other brands tested. Nicelle Oil is made and bottled in Nice, France. It is the highest type of pure olive oil producible.

Sell olive oil you can be proud of. There are so many brands you can't.

Do You Take Any Interest in Selling Bulk Sugar?

You'll be surprised what an interest you'll take in selling sugar if you'll sell Franklin Carton Sugar instead of bulk sugar.

It's a heap more interesting product. To be sure, we sell bulk sugar, but conditions with which we've had no connection have fixed it so that the retail profit on it is very small.

As a remedy for that we offer Franklin Carton Sugar. The profit on that is not small, and the ease of selling it, as compared with bulk sugar, will reduce the hard labor of your business to an extent you can't possibly realize until you've experienced it.

The truth is you can make money selling Franklin Carton Sugar.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

Help the Housekeeper if You Want to Hold Her Trade ::

Most housekeepers have a lot of trouble getting brooms that please them—you know how particular they are. We are making brooms to catch the trade of this class of people. Is there any doubt in your mind that you can sell such brooms—and keep on selling them? If there is we will dispel it.

Chipman & Wills Broom Co., 5 Granite St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TEAMS COST TWICE AS MUCH

There is no comparison between delivering goods by a team and delivering them by a Lindsley Car. The team way is slower and at least twice as expensive, when you figure up the cost by the year.

If you think of the Lindsley Car as a bad-smelling machine that gets out of order if you look at it, and keeps you poor getting repaired, you never were more mistaken in your life. A boy can run the Lindsley Car and it will need little or no repairing.

We say again—it will carry 1500 pounds thirty miles on a gallon of gasoline, and over rough roads.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

FULTON & WALKER CO. TWENTIETH and FILBERT STS. PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.

"Show All—Sell All"

This is the idea of a store like this. Notice that everything is where customers can see it. These bins protect you from loss by dust, dirt or bugs. A bin full of sugar shows it is sugar, makes people want sugar, and keeps every grain of sugar in clean, salable condition. Let us make an estimate for you.

It's a Hard Job, but We've Done It

You know how hard it is to please all your customers with coffee. It is natural for you to find it harder than we do, because you have a lot of things to do and we do nothing else. Private Estate Coffee is the result of many years' experimenting to please the popular taste, and it does it so well that we don't know of a grocer who has induced a customer to try it who isn't still using it. "No, They Don't Prefer It"

¶ A watcher of the sugar business said the other day:—"Can it be possible that any grocer prefers to sell bulk sugar when he can sell it in Franklin Cartons? Why I should think you'd get every grocer simply by showing the two propositions side by side!"

¶ It does seem reasonable, doesn't it, and yet we haven't succeeded—yet—in getting all grocers to handle Franklin Carton Sugar. No, we don't think they prefer to sell bulk sugar, but they've made no money on sugar for so long that a proposition to make it profitable is staggering and needs time for thought.

¶ They'll come to it some time, when the burden of the unnecessary work and the profit lost through overweight gets too heavy.

Get Them Started Now

Naturally you won't sell much canned corn during the summer, though June and a part of July are always good months for it.

If you will order just enough Onarga Country Gentleman Corn to get it known to your trade before the fresh corn season, you will find you've done a good thing for yourself when fall opens.

Onarga Corn is wholly different from other corn because it is cooked differently. It is cooked in the new automatic cooker that cooks the edges and the centre at the same time, and cooks it evenly through and through.

You'd hardly believe what a tremendous difference in flavor this makes.

HOW TO ADVERTISE A RETAIL STORE

BY ALBERT E. EDGAR

TEACHES

Nearly everybody in the English speaking world knows the reputation that the International Correspondence School, Scranton, Pa., have for teaching advertising by correspondence. The letter below is from the principal of that School of Advertising. It is an unsolicited compliment.

"THE OUTING PUBLISHING CO.,
Deposit, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I have read very carefully your new book, 'How to Advertise a Retail Store.' I want to say that, in my judgment, it is by far the best book on retail advertising that I have ever seen. It is really a comprehensive short course in advertising. Some subjects must necessarily be treated briefly in siugle-volume work on advertisiug, but Mr. Edgar has certainly done his work thoroughly. If a retail advertiser cannot get $5.00 worth of information out of this book, there is something wrong with him. This book is already very popular here iu our School. Two of the men here have already expressed their desire to own a personal copy. As I wrote you the other day, very frequently we have requests from students for a list of good books. We have already had occasion lo recommend this book to three students.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) S. ROLAND HALL,
Principal, School of Advertising."

"We haven't the slightest hesitation in recommending it to every retailer in Canada, and to every wholesaler, for that matter. It is splendidly written, neatly printed and contains information indispensable to every merchant. We are giving your book a good boost.

The opinion of one of New York's prominent copy specialists:

"The Editor of BRAINS, Deposit, N. Y.
Dear Sir: I have just received my copy of 'How to Advertise a Retail Store,' and I want to say to you that of all the books and periodicals in my business library it is by far the most practical and useful. The retailer or business man who has goods to sell, who cannot get out of it several times its cost every year, had better go out of business. The book will be a constant source of profit to me and I believe it will to every retailer who wants to make more money. It is complete and I think it is no more than right that you should know that it is appreciated.
Yours very truly,

The Slickest Collection Scheme Yet

The Plan of the Henry L. Whitney Co. Turned Inside Out. How they Assess Subscribers a Percentage not on Collections Made, but on the Amount of the Bills Given them to Collect. One Pennsylvania Merchant's Experience and How the Scheme Works Out.

Of all the many collection agency schemes which the "Grocery World" has seen and held up before its subscribers as good things to let alone, it seems to be necessary to give the palm, for pure slickness, to the scheme of a concern calling itself the "Henry L. Whitney Co.," Colonial Building, Reading, Pa. This concern goes about getting money for itself differently from any other collecting concern the "Grocery World" has ever seen.

The matter was brought to the "Grocery World's" attention by J. W. Reilly, a retail merchant of Palo Alto, Pa., who became mixed up with the Whitney outfit under circumstances quite unprofitable to himself. The agency induced Mr. Reilly to make the following contract with it:—

CONTRACT.

To the Henry L. Whitney Co., Reading, Pa.

Gentlemen:—Below find a list of bills, notes, accounts, claims and debts now due and owing to us, which, in consideration of your agreeing, by the acceptance of this list, to use your best judgment and ability in the collection and settlement of the same, and to pay over to us all sums out of the moneys collected by you remaining after the deduction by you of the divers fees and commissions hereinafter mentioned, we hereby assign and make over to you. We guarantee the accounts to be correct, and these several amounts are now justly due and unpaid from the parties against whom they are charged, after allowing all just credits and deductions according to the dates given; and we agree that the following are the fees and commissions hereinbefore and hereinafter referred to, to wit:—

FEES AND COMMISSIONS.

A fee, 1. On a list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $10,000, 1½ per cent.; or,

2. On a list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $5,000 and including $10,000, 2 per cent.; or,

3. On a list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $2,000 and including $5,000, 4 per cent.; or,

4. On a list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $1,000 and including $2,000, 7½ per cent.; or,

5. On a list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $250 and including $1,000, 10 per cent.

And a commission of 10 per cent. on claims collected without the institution of legal process, and of 50 per cent. on claims collected after the institution of legal process, or outlawed claims, with the understanding that in case of suit no expenses are to be charged against us, win or lose, unless we fail to prove our claim, but that if after this list is given to your commercial adjuster the debtors named herein should make payments to, or settlements with us, we are to pay you or allow you to retain out of any balance due us from you the same fees and commissions as if they had paid you, and that, if, at our request, you should forbear suit, or suspend or otherwise cease proceedings, we will pay the regular commissions and costs and expenses incurred.

In your first notification to the debtor you are authorized to sign our name to the same. We also inclose five 2-cents stamps for each account.

We hereby promise and agree to and with the Henry L. Whitney Co. that all information furnished us by said company, whether at our direct solicitation or voluntary on the part of said company at any time, should be considered and treated as strictly confidential, and we will in no wise reveal the same to any person not directly connected with our business, under penalty of having our guarantee in said company immediately canceled.

Respectfully yours,
Signature, J. W. REILLY.

Commercial adjusters of the Henry L. Whitney Co. are not allowed to change or modify the conditions of this agreement.

Particular attention is directed to the matter under "Fees and Commissions." A crafty play has been made here on the word "fee" which leaves the luckless subscriber to this contract in a position quite different from that which he expected. As is well known, it is the practice of all collecting agencies to charge a certain percentage on all claims collected and nothing on claims that are not. Mr. Reilly believed when he signed this contract, as 99 men out of 100 would have done, that by a "fee on list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $10,000, 1½ per cent.," etc., etc., the Whitney people meant that that would be their commission on all collections actually made up to that amount. So he gave them a list of claims aggregating $2,677.87, accompanied by a check for $11 to cover postage. Mr. Reilly swelled his list of old claims because the agent kindly suggested that the more claims he gave the less postage he would have to pay on each.

Nothing more was heard from the Whitney concern until a statement was received from them recently showing that they had collected $47.26. In the statement appeared an item of $54.44, which the Whitney agency said represented claims paid to Mr. Reilly direct, and which made total collections of $101.70. Still the statement showed that Mr. Reilly owed the agency $54.44! Mr. Reilly puzzled over the matter a good deal. He couldn't see how he could owe the agency anything when they already had $47.26 of his money, and he took his contract to a lawyer. After examining it the attorney advised him that he had innocently bound himself to pay the Whitney concern 4 per cent. on his aggregate of $2,677.87 of bad claims, whether a single cent was collected or not. In other words, by the cunning wording of the contract, "a fee of 4 per cent. on a list of bills aggregating a gross amount of over $2,000 and including $5,000" did not mean what practically everybody would think it meant, i. e., commissions on collections made, but a flat fee of $107.11, in Mr. Reilly's case, whether a cent was collected or not. In other words, if this contract is good, a merchant who gives the Whitney Co. $10,000 worth of bad debts to collect can be compelled to pay them 2 per cent., or $200, and if of the $10,000 worth of claims only $200 is collected they can keep every cent of it, or 100 per cent. commission. If only $100 is collected they can keep it all and ask the subscriber for $100 more. The slick feature of the scheme is based upon the certainty that of the average list of bad debts given an agency to collect, only a few will be collectable, but that some will almost surely be collected. Under the flat fee scheme the agency is thus permitted in many cases to keep every cent of what is collected and still claim more. A profitable scheme indeed!

After Mr. Reilly had awakened to his actual position he demanded an explanation and received the following smooth letter:—

GENERAL OFFICES, READING, PA.
February 12, 1908.

Dear Sir:—Agreeable to your request, we herewith send you copy of agreement of "Fees and Commissions" on claims recently assigned to us for collection on a basis of "No collection, no charge."

The gross amount of your claim is $2,677.87; 4 per cent. of the gross amount is $107.11, hence $107.11 is 4 per cent. of the gross amount of bills submitted and is retained out of the first collections, whether the money is paid to you or to us, until said fee is paid according to contract.

This subscription fee is retained for the successful prosecution of your accounts and the expenses of getting them ready for settlement, sheriff fees, literature and to help pay for the enormous expense paid out in postage in following up your debtors and a hundred other incidental expenses. This amount is in nowise a fee placed to our credit, but is paid for our mutual interest, and honestly applied as above indicated, in following your accounts to satisfactory settlement.

Trusting that the foregoing will explain matters satisfactorily and promising good and faithful service, we remain,

Yours for results,
HENRY L. WHITNEY CO.
Henry L. Whitney,
Treasurer.

Since he has been advised by his attorney that the contract could not be enforced in court, because of its very evident deceitfulness, Mr. Reilly refuses to pay the balance claimed and will at once withdraw his claims from the concern's hands. As to the latter he may strike another snag, for in the first paragraph of the Whitney contract they have cunningly introduced what the court might say was a complete assignment of all those claims to the Whitney Co.

The Henry L. Whitney Co. is indeed composed of very crafty gentlemen!

No Indictments Against Springfield, Ohio, Grocers.

No indictments were returned against members of the Retail Grocers' Association of Springfield, Ohio, by the grand jury, which has made its final report to Judge Kunkle. In its report to the court the grand jury states that it thoroughly investigated the alleged combinations among the grocers, to keep independent dealers from selling at certain prices, and they found some evidence that certain grocers had influenced the wholesale houses in such a way that they would not sell goods to the independent men, but that it was impossible to secure evidence of such character and of such weight as would warrant an indictment. The report also states that in connection with the grocers investigation the jury found what appeared to be a combine among the millers of the county in compelling their customers to sell certain brands of flour at certain Butter and Oleo Interests Clash in Washington, D. C.

What promises to be a hot fight between dairy interests and oleomargarine manufacturers of the country is developing at the United States Department of Agriculture. The oleomargarine interests are trying to keep the Government inspection mark off of oleomargarine, while the dairy interests insist upon that mark. There will be a hearing at the department on June 25th before Secretary Wilson and Chief Melvin, of the Bureau of Animal Industry. A statement issued at the department says "the department is not seeking to favor dairy interests, nor to punish oleo manufacturers." The department holds the papers in which pound prints of oleomargarine are wrapped are containers of meat food products, which, under the meat inspection law, should bear the Government mark. The oleo manufacturers maintain these are not true containers, and that the department is subjecting them to useless trouble and expense.

This Freight Rate Advance Will Affect All Retail Grocers if it Goes Through

All Railroads in Official Classification Territory have Announced a Ten Per Cent. Advance in Freight Rates, which is being Bitterly Fought by Commercial Interests. Means a General Increase in Freight Charges. Butter, Eggs and Poultry Under Old and New Rates.

Readers of the "Grocery World" have noted from the last few issues that shippers and receivers of freight all over the country are greatly exercised over an announcement that all railroad lines in official classification territory proposed to make a flat advance in freight rates of 10 per cent. effective August 1, 1908. This would make the advance practically general over the entire country. The railroads excuse the advance on the ground that various laws adverse to their interests have recently been passed both by Congress and various States, and that the only way they can come out whole is by charging more freight.

The main defense of the advance is from the pen of the vice-president of the New York Central lines, who after detailing the large additional expenses which will confront the railroads from now on, contends that the 10 per cent. increase is both necessary and reasonable. Touching the advance in rates on certain food products, he has the following to say:—

> An increase of 10 per cent. on butter and eggs would make an increase of a little more than eight-tenths of a mill per pound; yhile on dressed poultry the increase would be a little more than nine-tenths of a mill per pound.
> I happen to have before me a bill from a western company for thirty pounds of dressed chicken, charged at 25 cents per pound, or a total of $7.50; and, as one of the great army of consumers of the products of that company, I should be perfectly willing to have nine-tenths of a mill per pound, or a total for the thirty pounds of less than 3 cents ($.0285) added to the cost of these chickens if the result of such an increase, or some fair increase uniformly applied to all shippers and shipments, shall have the effect, as I believe it will have, of giving employment to the hundreds of thousands of railroad men who are out of work; of returning to the factories and mills that manufacture locomotives, freight and passenger equipment, the thousands of men who have been forced into unwelcome idleness on account of the inability of the railroads to continue their annual purchase of the output of these concerns.
> If it will return to steady, well-paid employment the thousands of idle coal miners, iron ore miners, and employees of the great rolling mills that are closed or working on exceedingly short time, every individual citizen can well afford, and if it can be clearly set before him the almost infinitesimal effect on the individual of a 10 per cent. increase in freight rates—he will gladly accept his share of the burden in order to restore to this country the full dinner pail and the abounding prosperity of the last decade.
> To illustrate how little an increase of 10 per cent. would mean to each individual—and in the last analysis that must be the controlling consideration—I beg to submit the following facts:—
> The freight rate on a suit of clothes—including shoes and hat—from Boston, Philadelphia or New York to any point in the Mississippi Valley is about 9 cents. The suit will sell from $10 to $30, according to quality. An increase of 10 per cent. would add 9 mills to the cost of the suit. For a distance of 300 miles the freight rate is 3½ cents.
> A 10 per cent. increase would add 3½ mills to the cost of the suit.
> The freight on a harvester for 300 miles, boxed and crated, by the carload as they are shipped, would be $1.76. A 10 per cent. increase in this freight rate would amount to about 17½ cents. The machine sells for approximately $130. Would the manufacturer who makes the harvester, would the farmer who buys and uses it, object to this almost infinitesimal addition to the cost if, by reason of it, thousands of well-paid, hungry consumers were added to those who buy the grain and other products of the nation's farms?

The commercial interests of the country are bitterly fighting against the increase, and held a meeting in Chicago a few days ago. Present at this were representatives of mercantile associations from all parts of the country, and at the end of the session a resolution was adopted puttting the whole matter up to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

If the proposed advance becomes operative, every retail grocer who receives goods by freight will have to pay it or pass it along to his customers by an increase in his selling prices.

New potatoes have advanced again and are now quoted at $4 per barrel, as against a price a few days ago of $2.50 to $2.75. Virginia and Maryland are supplying the present receipts.

How the Sanitary League Says Grocers' Meats and Provisions Should be Bought Extracts from its Instructions to Consumers Along these Lines. Also Tells How to Interpret Labels.

Somebody sends the "Grocery World" a copy of a leaflet which the National Consumers' League, 105 East 22d street, New York, has given general circulation among consumers. The leaflet conveys instructions to buyers of food products everywhere as to how to purchase edibles of all character. The following are extracts:—

AT THE STORE.

Buy food at the eleanest stores only.

Buy only elean, fresh food.

Refuse to take food handled by dirty hands. Insist upon it being well wrapped. Paper bags are best.

Buy only the purest eandies. Is the eandy pure and clean that your children buy from the push earts? Do not buy deeayed food because it is cheap.

Do not buy bread and cakes at dirty bakeries. Look into the baking rooms, if possible. Are they elean?

Examine the paekages of cereals for worms before eooking. Packages of long standing often beeome infested with worms and are sometimes found at the best stores.

Does your groeer keep his butter and milk in clean, eold plaees, and are they eovered? Does he keep his eandies, figs, dates, berries, lettuce, bread, ete., exposed to flies and dust from the street, in shop or show window? Flies earry dirt and disease to food and man.

Are your grocer and buteher and baker cleanly in person? Are their elerks eleanly?

Urge them to keep their goods off the sidewalk. There is danger of disease in street dirt. Ask the delieatessen storekeeper and the pusheart man to keep their eatables eovered.

Refuse to buy food sold in open buckets whieh stand uneovered in the store day after day.

FISH, FLESH AND FOWL.

Seleet a reliable tradesman as you would select a reliable physieian. The best and purest food is eheapest in the end.

FISH.

Buy only fresh fish. It should have red gills and be firm, with moist and bright seales, elear eyes, and be rigid when handled. Stale fish is flabby, has seales dull, eyes sunken, covered with film and a bad odor about the gills.

Lobsters and crabs should be purchased alive.

Do not eat oysters in May, June, July or August. They are best in months with the "R." Clams may be eaten throughout the year. All shell fish should smell fresh, and the shells should elose firmly when put in water or touehed with the finger.

FLESH.

Buy only fresh meat. Beef should be a rosy, red eolor, yellowish white, fat, firm, elastie and scarcely moist when touched with the finger. Cook it well. Do not buy wet, flabby beef that is pink or purple. Good lamb and mutton is firm. close grained and light red, with fat white and hard.

Fresh veal is pale red, with firm white fat. Bad veal is soft, mushy and bluish tinge.

Good pork is solid, pure white fat, pink flesh. Cook it thoroughly. Reject yellow, soft pork.

Make your own sausages if possible. Mueh of the sausage meat we buy is preserved by ehemicals, because fresh meat so rapidly spoils.

Do not eat raw meats of any kind. Cooking kills germs if they are present. Cook thoroughly all meats, espeeially Hamburg steak and pork.

Do not let eats and dogs eome near meat.

Canned meats must be free from molds and a greenish hue when opened. If the top of the ean is raised in the centre, it has begun to spoil and should not be eaten.

FOWL.

Buy only poultry that is firm to the toueh, has pink or yellow color, with fresh odor and strong, unbroken skin.

Stale poultry is flabby, bluish green on the erop and abdomen, has bad odor and skin is easily pulled apart.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

BUSINESS IS GOOD.

Depression of business is in the air. However much it is represented in our receipts or in our profits or in your sales, the impression must not go out that things are dull. "Business is good." That's the way to talk and to act. The principle we want to lay down is not one of deception in its narrow sense, but rather the principle of attraction. "Like begets like." Gloom brings gloom. Hopefulness and cheer and a good wholesome feeling of success brings business. That is the law.

SELLING FLOUR.

The 1/8-barrel sacks of "Our Own" brand of flour must be turned into money, so we have made the price 80 cents. Bread will be baked from this flour every day and served with the iced tea to those who want a bite. It will be nicely sliced and buttered. This will show just what kind of bread "Our Own" brand produces, and it no doubt will make lots of sales. Talk of the texture of the bread. Its lightness and its sweetness. Stroke the flour off with the bread knife. Refer to its whiteness and wonderful rich appearance.

VINEGARS.

When you're selling lettuce and cucumbers and such things, reach for a bottle "Our Own" vinegar. It's very suggestive. Guarantee it the pure apple cider product for only 12 cents.

Keep the olive and salad oil before you and before your trade. In selling goods get into the habit of associating things. Mention lemons when you sell sardines. Evaporated milk when you sell coffee; also strawberries. Prepared mustard when you sell boiled ham. Cheese when you sell macaroni, and so on through the list. Of course, the things may be reversed, and say boiled ham when you sell mustard, etc.

SELLING CANNED SALMON.

We have been selling a lot of Alaska salmon. Now, you'll have to turn around and push the Clover Hill Columbia River in 1-pound tins. We have 25 cases. It's paler than the Alaska, but much richer, more oily, more tender, altogether more dainty. Should be placed on the ice before serving and the tin must be cut around the side and a puncture made on the top. Special next week, 20 cents.

CANNED TONGUE ON ICE.

Don't sell a can of tongue from the shelf. Let it all come from the cooler. Explain this to your customers. It's a winner. This, too, must be cut around the edge of the can.

FREE ICED TEA.

All week we will serve free Li-Chang tea, iced. In inviting people to have a glass of tea, do it so you do not give the impression that they're expected to make a purchase. The worst feature about all demonstrators is that they put the sampler ill at ease. We want to eliminate this. It leaves a far better effect. Incidentally say that we're serving Li-Chang. Let it go at that.

One Reason for Higher Freight Rates.

As reported in another column, the railroads of the country are about to inaugurate a 10 per cent. advance in freight rates, which because it will be practically general over the country will affect almost every retail grocer in business. Some of the railroads' reasons for making the advance are curious. For instance, in a statement issued by the vice-president of the New York Central Railroad, he says the railroads will need to make more money because of the employers' liability law just passed by Congress. This law permits railroad employees to recover damages from roads engaged in interstate commerce, even when the negligence or injury complained of is chargeable to a fellow-employee. Under the old law, if one employee was damaged by the negligence or wantonness of another employee, he could not recover from the common employer, although he of course had a usually worthless action against the fellow-employee.

The railroads believe that this new act will greatly increase the lawsuits against them and will cost them much money, which they must raise through advanced freight rates.

The substance of their argument is of course this: "Because we propose to be negligent and treat our employees badly, and because the law will now compel us to pay damages for this we will need more money, and it is only fair to make the freight shippers pay for our carelessness."

This seems just a little illogical, even for a predatory railroad.

The Kellogg Brand "Square Deal."

The Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flake Co., which is rapidly becoming the holier-than-thou Pharisee of the cereal business, is out with a new advertisement, the substance of which is as follows:—

A "SQUARE DEAL" FOR EVERY GROCER.

That's the Kellogg Policy.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes is the only corn flakes that does not put the average grocer at a disadvantage by selling the chain stores, department stores and buying exchanges at jobbers' prices. It is distributed strictly through jobbing channels and every retailer, great and small, is on the same basis.

It is technically correct that the concern does not sell department stores, but it does worse—it permits some of those stores to sell at prices far below even the price the jobber pays in carload lots. Take Macy & Co., of New York, as an illustration. They advertised Kellogg's Corn Flakes at 6 cents. E. W. Murphy, the New York representative, claimed to be intending to consult a lawyer as to what he could do in the case, and so far as any action is concerned he may be still consulting him. The Macy store went right on selling the product at 6 cents and probably will do so as long as it likes.

So that the Kellogg "square deal" seems to be confined to robbing retail grocers' associations and large retail purchasers of their fundamental right to buy on a quantity basis.

A Sample.

In the last issue of the "Grocery World" appeared an article stating that the wholesale grocery trade were quite in favor of the establishment of limited selling prices by manufacturers, but were perfectly convinced in advance that some of their number would violate any limited price made.

Apropos of this, and in proof of it, a well-known Philadelphia jobber submitted to the writer during the week the following facts, all of which were within his personal knowledge:—

A certain Philadelphia jobbing house, bound as all jobbers are to sell a certain brand of soap at a limited price, was caught red-handed breaking the contract and the price at the same time. A charge against him was laid before the manufacturer, who told the jobber of the accusation and required him to disprove it under oath. Without the slightest hesitation both the jobber and the salesman who actually agreed to give and did give the rebate, took an affidavit that they had never done what there was unimpeachable evidence that they did.

The writer asked this informant if he had actual evidence that the aforesaid jobber had broken his price contract, and that his oath and that of his salesman were false. The reply being that he had such evidence, he was then asked why he did not press the case further, and answered that he had "certain reasons" for not doing so.

The jobber who submitted these facts to the writer made the sententious comment that the strongest limited price plan framable was not proof against false oaths. To which the "Grocery World" assents, particularly if other jobbers who have the evidence of wrongdoing and could show offenders up, are not sufficiently warm in the trade interest to do so.

A Good Decision.

The highest New Jersey appeal court has finally decided the potted ham case in the only way it could be justly decided, and the "Grocery World" rejoices that a principle is now laid down which will serve for the protection of retail grocers everywhere.

A Vineland (N. J.) grocer sold a can of potted ham, which proved to be bad and poisoned the eater. Obviously the retailer could not know it was bad, since it was both bought and sold by him in the original sealed package. Neither could he learn whether it was bad or not without opening every tin and having it analyzed. This, of course, would be wholly impracticable for several reasons.

Nevertheless, when the injured party rightly decided that the packer ought to be responsible and not the dealer, and accordingly sued the packer for $10,000, the packer contended that it was the grocer's fault and not his at all. Furthermore two New Jersey courts sustained him in that view. The Court of Errors and Appeals, however, decides that where a retailer sells sealed package goods, about the quality of which he cannot possibly inform himself in any practicable way, he is entitled to rely upon the packer and so is the consumer.

Any other decision would work the grossest injustice.

Gentlemen's Agreements.

So-called "gentlemen's agreements" between manufacturers or purveyors in various lines, by which certain trade conditions, such as prices, are held by all at a certain point, no actual contract being signed, however, have become in a sense the sport of the trade. This is because there has never been one which some gentlemanly party to it has not broken.

Witness the gentleman's agreement which obviously must exist among the packers of California canned goods. On the same day of last week practically every representative packing house mailed prices on its 1908 pack to its representatives in various sections of the country. In all cases the prices were identical, and the terms of sale practically identical. This could not be coincidence. There is unquestionably a working agreement among the packers to maintain prices on a certain level.

Now, any agreement to set a price must necessarily include a covenant to maintain it, and if this arrangement of the California packers is being observed, we will find the representatives of all the packers holding the prices which have been placed in their hands to sell by. And yet the Philadelphia representatives of two large California packers, evident parties to the price agreement, started to offer goods at 2½ to 5 per cent. below the market the very first time they started out to offer goods at all. Which means, of course, that another gentleman's agreement has been knifed in the house of its friends.

These are hard times for restricters of competition. Gentlemen's agreements amount to nothing, and the iron-clad contract which might serve is against the law.

The New York Letter

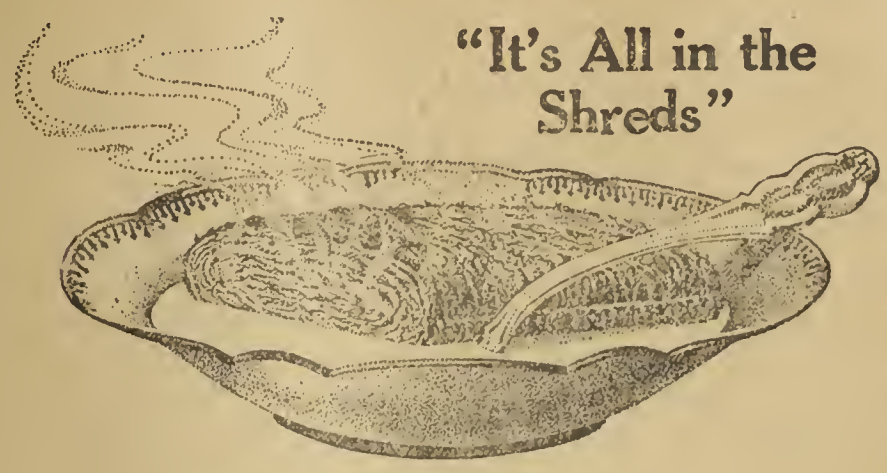
Kellogg's Reasons for Cutting Off Large Retail Buyers Prove to be Selfish After All. Issue a Circular Admitting that Retailers Would Overbuy and They Would Have to Take Back Unsold Surplus. No Patent or Trademark Protection in Adulterated or Misbranded Food. Small Notes of New York Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, June 19, 1908.

Copies of the circular issued by the Kellogg company in explanation of its attitude in relation to quantity sales have been received in this city. The reasons given for not selling to retailers and the exchanges are not convincing in the case of some prominent dealers who are active in the retailers' societies, and the subject is likely to be discussed at future meetings.

The argument that retailers would be likely to buy in excess of requirements in order to get the benefits of the quantity prices, and that the company would sometimes be obliged to take back the surplus purchases in order to prevent the sale of stale goods and to protect the quality of the flakes, does not seem very strong to these dealers. One of the officers of the New York society said that trouble of that kind has not been reported by other manufacturers who sell to retailers and he did not think that the toasted flake people would be bothered much by unreasonably large purchases if they also sold to people who have the price, whether they be whoesalers or retailers. The special need of freshness in the product, he said, may be assured in various ways without doing away with the quantity system. He added that there are other articles in which freshness is essential, and yet they are sold readily to retailers and to retailers' exchanges.



Of the three associations of grocers in this city two have declared themselves against the plan of manufacturers placing a minimum price on their products The associations in the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx have taken this position, while the organization in Brooklyn has a committee which is considering the subject, the idea having met with more favor in that than in either of the other societies.

In Manhattan, especially, the leading members seem fully convinced that the plan is opposed to the best interests of the dealers A dealer, most of whose trade is of a credit character and whose expenses are high, does not desire to sell at the same price as another who has a cash business, with comparatively small expenses. It is a common belief that the minimum price almost unavoidably becomes the actual fixed price.

It is pointed out that one man may sell an article at a lower price than a competitor gets and still make a larger profit on that article, because of the difference in the cost of doing business. A remark that was made at one of the meetings and has been repeated since when the subject has been under discussion, is that a fixed price would turn the grocer into a sort of a slot machine, with no power of initiative. There is no evidence, it is furthermore said, that the California grocers who have fixed prices are any better off than are the grocers in this city who buy where they can get the cheapest supplies and sell for as good prices as they can get.

Manufactures and wholesalers are interested in the principle laid down by Judge Robb at Washington in the whisky case, in which he said that the courts would not protect patent and trade-mark privileges of food that is misbranded or adulterated. It is suggested that this principle may prove a potent influence in deterring manufacturers, foreign and domestic, from putting out any except honestly made and properly labeled goods A manufacturer will scarcely engage in the expense of advertising and marketing a commodity if others may with impunity reap the advantage of his campaign. Foreign packers against whom the food law has not been fully enforced as yet, may be affected by Importers of olive oil have been invited to meet Mr. Reynolds, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on Wednesday, June 24th, in the rooms of the New York Produce Exchange. He will sail for Europe directly after the conference and proposes to investigate various questions connected with the business, getting information abroad, as well as in this country.

There has been friction between the Government authorities and importers over a number of matters which Mr Reynolds expects to adjust, including the old question as to the standards of edible oil and oil fit only for mechanical uses Other issues as to blending and labeling will be considered.

Sugar refiners have been notified that on June 29th the Interstate Commerce Commission will give a hearing at Washington on the question of differentials in lighterage charges in this city and vicinity. The commission has already taken some evidence. It seems that some of the Brooklyn and Jersey City refineries have enjoyed advantages in free lighterage and in rebates, if no lighterage is required, because of the refineries being directly adjacent to the tracks, while other refineries not in the favored district have been paying lighterage charges.

The Brooklyn Retail Grocers' Association has decided to notify all manufacturers that they may send notices of deals and special offers and all such notices will be read at the meetings. It is expected that this will bring about a gradual and healthful increase in the direct business between the manufacturers and the retailers.

Millers to Combat Breakfast Foods.

The millers who attended the convention of millers in Detroit, Mich., last week under the auspices of the Millers' National Federation, took action toward beginning a campaign of advertising to uphold the merits of white flour as against the patent breakfast foods. The millers assert that the food manufacturers are injuring the white flour business by some of their advertising and intend to combat this with publicity of their own. A resolution was adopted instructing Secretary Goetzmann to get into communication with the presidents of all of the milling clubs throughout the country and take up with them the cost of a comprehensive advertising campaign in their sections and learn what contributions each club will make toward the work. All of the presidents will be requested to have replies in Secretary Goetzmann's hands by September 1st, so that the campaign may be commenced in the early fall if enough millers favor it to make it possible. Among the remedies suggested for millers' troubles in resolutions adopted today were a more careful study of the demands of trade, a refusal to let the buyer fix the price on products, a refusal to make any section a dumping ground for overproduction and an insistence that all output shall show a profit and a larger membership of the millers in the federation.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XLII.—Keep Your Own Fads Back.

Never let your customer know that you have any fads of your own.

If the merchant will invariably show an interest in every fad of every customer, and will never let the customer know that he has a fad of his own, he stands a much better chance of succeeding. This is hard work, for the man with a fad dislikes wasting time listening to the details of another man's fad. If the merchant finds this to be the case with himself, he can readily see how he could become a bore to his customers, and even drive them away from his store by continually talking about his own fads.

The merchant cannot afford to lose customers, so he must make himself interested in their fads, from policy's sake, but the customer can trade somewhere else just as easy as at his store, so he has no reason for allowing himself to become bored to death by a merchant who persists in talking of some subject in which he has no interest.

There is another reason why the merchant should set his own fads in the background and make himself acquainted with those his customers favor. There is money in catering to them. Fads come and go, but they cost money all the time, and the merchant who never allows his own fad to interfere with those of his customers is better able to tell about when each fad is taking its departure, and when is the right time to clean up stock in that direction.

As an instance of what fads do for merchants, just notice the present big business on post cards. Merchants in almost every line of business are handling them, and the volume of business and the profits are both good.

Educating the Retail Dealer Under Federal Food Law.

Manufacturers Given Credit for Campaigns of this Kind. Sample Piece of Illuminating Literature.

Much credit belongs to large manufacturing concerns who have disseminated much matter among the retail trade explaining the provisions of the Federal food law and warning retailers how to protect themselves under it. There is a class of manufacturers who have pursued precisely the opposite course.

A particularly useful piece of literature of the kind noted above has been issued by a well-known Baltimore spice and flavoring extract house, and its substance is worth reproducing here:—

NATIONAL PURE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

1. What it is.

The National Pure Food and Drugs Act is a law passed by Congress regulating the manufacture and sale of all classes of foods and drugs sold in interstate trade (shipped from one State to another).

2. What are standards?

All goods must conform to the standards prescribed by that act, be labeled in conformity with its regulations, or additional regulations formulated by the Agricultural Department.

Drug standards are those formulated in the U. S. Pharmacopeia or National Formulary. The standard for food so far as have been promulgated are given in circular No. 19, issued by the Agricultural Department.

3. What is penalty for violation?

It may be a fine of from $5 to $500 and imprisonment for six months for the first offense, and for further violations the fines are so great that no man can afford to run the risk of an action by the Government.

4. What is a guaranty?

The jobber to project himself should be careful to get a guaranty from the manufacturer on all purchases, and the retail dealer in turn to protect himself should require a guaranty from the jobber. The manufacturer then becomes the only party to be prosecuted in case of adulteration or misbranding.

5. What is confiscation?

When goods have been pronounced impure, improperly labeled or not up to standard, the Government officers may seize and CONFISCATE them. The jobber and retailer have no redress whatever if the manufacturer is not FINANCIALLY RESPONSIBLE. While the dealer has paid for the goods and is immune from prosecution under his guaranty, he will lose the value of the goods destroyed unless the manufacturer protects him.

The merchant should therefore exercise care as to the financial responsibility of the manufacturer from whom he buys.

If, for instance, a dealer were to buy $100 worth of goods, say, drugs, extracts, preserves, pickles, canned goods, spices, etc., and they were pronounced impure, they would be seized and destroyed by the Government.

6. Caution.

There are many manufacturers without financial standing operating over the United States, who are offering spices, drugs, flavoring extracts, etc., at a price often below the cost of manufacture.

The sequel is that they go into the hands of a receiver and the dealer purchasing from them finds himself, after they have gone out of business, in the position of having the goods confiscated and no recourse against the manufacturer.

It is advisable to buy only from such houses as will guarantee against fines and confiscation, and who are financially able to back up their guaranty.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Macon, Ga., Jobbers.

Asserting that the proposed increase in freight rates on foodstuffs will raise the cost of meat, flour, corn, oats, meal and other supplies for both man and beast more than $2,000,000 in Georgia alone, the wholesale grocers in Macon, Ga., have joined in a strong protest that will later be made to the Interstate Commerce Commission. A circular letter from J. A. Sams, division freight agent for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in Atlanta, informs the Macon jobbers that there will be two and three cents per hundred pounds increase in rates on foodstuffs after August 1, 1908.

The wholesalers assert that there will be over $200,000 added to the cost of food products for the city of Macon alone in a single season. What force the fight against the increase will have remains yet to be seen, but it is declared now that the protest will take definite shape immediately and a fight to the bitter end will be put up. Macon wholesale merchants are astonished at the announcement.

New York City.

Not all grocers' organizations are in favor of the principle established by resolution at the recent Boston convention of retail grocers, known as "the Pacific coast plan," by which the manufacturer would determine the retail selling price of his products. The three local New York City associations, for instance, are evidently wary of the scheme, for both the Manhattan and Bronx Associations at their last meetings declared against the scheme, while Brooklyn's Association feels much the same way, but is investigating it before passing resolutions.

Packer, Not Retailer, Responsible for Harm Done by Sealed Meat Products

Highest New Jersey Court Says that Where Consumer was Injured by Eating Bad Potted Ham, the Packer, and Not the Grocer, is Responsible. Case Originated in Vineland, and Two Courts First Decided Otherwise.

The New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals, which is the highest court of that State, handed down a decision during the week which will be received with satisfaction not only by retail grocers of New Jersey, but by dealers elsewhere, as the decisions of the New Jersey courts have an influence on the courts of all other States. The case was that brought by Mrs. Sarah V. Tomlinson, of Vineland, N. J., against a Chicago meat packer to recover damages for injuries sustained by eating a tin of bad ham.

The case originated a few years ago and was commented upon at the time in the "Grocery World." The plaintiff bought a tin of potted ham at a Vineland grocery store and after eating it became violently ill. It was chemically examined and found to be in bad condition. She accordingly sued the packer for $10,000 damages and served the papers on his New Jersey representative. The packer defended, on the ground that the retailer and not the packer was responsible, since it was the retailer who sold the goods. The lower court and the Supreme Court upheld this view, but the Court of Errors and Appeals decides otherwise. In brief the ruling is that in such a case, where the retailer buys in sealed packages and sells in the same sealed packages, the packer is responsible if there is anything wrong with the contents, and not the dealer.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no quotable change from last week. In both new teas and old, prices remain unchanged on previous reported level and the business is from hand to mouth only. Lower grades seem to be in principal demand.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has ruled very narrow during the past week. In neither grade has there been any quotable change. It is reported that a large proportion of the syndicate coffee sold in Europe was brought in by representatives of the syndicate itself. Whether this was true or not, the fact remains that options declined almost immediately after the sale. There seems to be a growing impression that the valorization plan is doomed to failure. One reason for its weakness is the fact that the consuming trade persistently declines to be used to help carry the syndicate's enormous load of actual coffee. Mild coffees are firm and in comparatively small supply. Java and Mocha steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no change for the week. Raws have fluctuated slightly, but without any material change from last week. Refined sugar is also unchanged and gives no prospect of any immediate change. If there is a change it will probably be an advance. The demand for refined sugar is good, although possibly a little under what it would have been if there had not been a large surplus of unsold sugar about the market.

Syrup and Molasses.

The market for glucose has made no change during the past week and gives no indication of any change in the near future. Compound syrup is unchanged in price and in light demand. Sugar syrup is unchanged in price and in fair demand for export purposes. Molasses steady and unchanged.

Fish.

The mackerel market is weak. Large supplies of mackerel in several grades has reduced the price of new shores $1 a barrel and spring caught Irish about $1.50 a barrel. Norway 3s, the weakest grade of Norway's, also show concessions. Cod, hake and haddock are all very dull. Domestic sardines are in fair demand at prices which while nominally unchanged are still shaded here and there about the market. French sardines are in moderate demand at a slight decline from the highest prices. Norwegian sardines are dull and unchanged. Salmon is in fair demand, a moderate business having been done in future Columbia River brands.

Canned Goods.

Now that the drought has been broken, the tomato market is not quite so strong, and more packers are willing to sell at previously quoted prices. The demand for both spot and future goods is quiet and no change in price can be recorded. Corn is unchanged and in fair demand. Some grades of Southern corn are firm. Sales of peas have been large, but prices are ruling on a very low level. As compared with last year's prices the present range shows a remarkable slump, particularly to holders who still have old peas on hand. Apples are about unchanged from last week and in fair request. California canned goods on spot are dull and practically all holders have reduced their prices to come somewhere near figures named on future goods. There has been a good future business done at the prices named last Monday. There has been no change in the small Baltimore line of canned goods, the packing of which is proceeding uneventfully.

Dried Fruits.

The prune market is unchanged both on the coast and in the East, and both as to spot and future goods. The demand is fair. Peaches are very week, the old goods being obtainable at comparatively low prices. On futures nearly all packers are about a cent below the opening price and values bid fair to go even lower. Apricots are not particularly strong and the demand is light. Currants are in fair demand at steady prices. Raisins are still very weak and seem not to be wanted. Citron, dates and figs are unchanged and dull.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line, including all grades of hams, bellies and bacon have advanced ½ cent. The advance is due to much better demand, and if the demand continues we are likely to go into even higher prices soon. Both pure and compound lard are firm at a ¼ to a ½ cent advance over last week. The advance is seasonable

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

and is due to a better demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged, the demand for all being good. A slight advance in these products may be expected in the near future

Butter.

The butter market is in a very healthy condition at present prices. There is a very active demand for consumption as well as speculation. The quality of the butter arriving now is the best of the year and the production is about normal. No change in price seems likely in the near future.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged on the basis reported last week. Fully half the present receipts are showing heat defects and have to be sold at concession. Present conditions will probably continue during the hot weather and the percentage of fancy eggs will grow less as the season advances. No change in the price seems likely within the next few days.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm, but shows an advance of ½ cent over last week. The bulk of the receipts show grass flavor and meet with a ready sale for consumptive purposes. The make of cheese is not as large as a year ago, the dry weather in the cheese producing sections being responsible for a very short supply of milk. If there is any change it will probably be an advance.

Produce.

Bermuda onions, $1.25 to $1.50 per crate; Texas, $1.25 to $1.65 per crate; Egyptian, $2.75 per bag, demand fair; old potatoes, $1 to $1.25 per bushel, scarce and good demand; carrots, $3.50 per 100 bunches, demand good; scullions, 75 cents to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand good; red radishes, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches; white, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand fair to good; rhubarb, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches, demand fair; spinach, $1 per barrel, demand fair; peas, 50 to 70 cents per basket, demand fair to good; beets, $2 to $2.50 per 100 bunches, demand fair to good; salad, 50 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; cauliflower, No. 1, 8 to 10 cents per bunch; No. 2, 2 to 3 cents per bunch, demand fair to good; cabbage, Pennsylvania, 75 to 85 cents per barrel, demand fair.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.65 to $2 per 100 bunches; 8-hands, $1.15 to $1.40 per 100 bunches; 7-hands, 75 cents to $1 per 100 bunches; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per 100 bunches; red, $1.50 to $2.50 per bunch, demand fair; California oranges, $3.50 to $4.50 per box, demand fair to good; limes, $1 per 100, demand good; grapefruit, $4 to $6 per box, scarce and good demand; pineapples, $2 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good; lemons, $2.50 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Coffee.

Since we issued our last report of the 15th ultimo some important new developments were witnessed, most prominent of which are the sales of the Sao Paulo Government at public auction in Europe and at private sale here. The selling price in the European markets was limited to the basis of 50 francs per 50 kilos for strict, good, average Santos, and none were sold there below that limit, which was the limit set by the Government months ago as its minimum price. But the sales in the United States were made at a much lower parity, so that we are forced to believe that the Government's selling limit, 50 francs, had reference only to European markets, which, if this is the case, should have been specifically stated at the time official announcement was made of the selling basis fixed by the Sao Paulo Government in order to guard against any misunderstanding.

We consider the inauguration of Government sales a judicious step, inasmuch as it reduces the risks previously assumed by the Government and tends to relax, although as yet only in a moderate degree, the artificial situation heretofore existing. It is our opinion that further sales will be made between now and the time new crop coffees can reach consuming markets, and we calculate that the Government may be able to dispose of altogether about 1,500,000 bags during that period without any great sacrifice in the price. This would still leave a large enough quantity in the hands of the Government to prevent the trade from stocking up, or to prevent speculators from entering the market.

If the next crop, as we are led to believe, will again be a small one, that is, smaller than the world consumes, then the Government may successfully repeat a year hence the operation of disposing of some more of its holdings, and it is possible that by the 1st of September, 1909, these Government holdings may be reduced to about 5,000,000 bags, the value of which would then be dependent upon the size of the 1909-10 crop.

The problem of a successful or unsuccessful winding up of the Government undertaking is, however, only of indirect interest to consuming markets. Importers and jobbers everywhere have felt, and are feeling now more than ever that the actions of the Sao Paulo Government have interfered and are interfering with their regular course of business, and all hands, except those who are interested in Government consignments, are imbued with the opinion that the Government had better have left the article alone, firmly believing that in that case a much healthier state of affairs would exist now.

The position of coffee has improved since the 1st of July last year. The visible supply since then has decreased about 1,833,000 bags, and a further decrease of about 500,000 bags during the current month will probably take place.

The consumption during the last five years has increased about 300,000 bags per annum, and is now 1,500,000 bags larger than it was five years ago, with prospects of a further improvement in that direction.

In spite of serious financial disturbances the world over, which have interfered with trade for some months past, it is surprising to note that the deliveries from port stocks in Europe and United States for the present fiscal year will exceed those of last year, when they were the largest on record. Under such conditions it seems to us that we are justified in assuming that the deliveries from port stocks represent more accurately than ever before the actual consumption. If there was only some assurance that bumper crops are a matter of the past all would be well. We are afraid, however, that we will again encounter a large crop in a few years from now, one that will be millions of bags more than consumption requires.

The into-sight movement of mild sorts during May shows a considerable falling off, being about 125,000 bags less than the average receipts during that month. The total receipts for the fiscal year will nevertheless equal, if not exceed, those of last year, when they were the smallest encountered since 1902-3. Although stocks are small, interest is lacking.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Increased buying of the new pack of peas of all grades caused an active market here for that article this week, and the outlook is favorable for continued activity during the remainder of this month. Keen disappointment is felt because of the short crop and small pack, where a bumper crop and a large pack had been anticipated. The Baltimore packers will certainly not be bothered for warehouse room to carry the peas that they will have on hand for the fall trade after filling all of their sales up to date. The fine quality of the best grades of each size is the redeeming feature. Peas bought at to-day's prices will make no loss to the buyer.

No one here will be surprised to see some improvement, at any time, in the prices of both spot and future tomatoes. The steady demand in this market from all sections, except the middle West, where they depend on the canners nearer home, has gradually worn away the stock of spot goods, and has caused many sellers of futures to withdraw from the market, temporarily, to await developments. The present selling prices of tomatoes are based on the expectation or hope of conditions 100 per cent. favorable to the canner, and he is taking long chances. The jobber who buys strictly first-class brands now is not likely to regret his purchase for the fall trade. In other lines of vegetables the demand has been fair in a small way, the same character of buying as heretofore, embracing almost every article in the list, and the prices are steady and firm, with string beans as the leader this week. Corn continues firm.

We are having a strong and active market for strawberries, gooseberries and raspberries, as well as for white cherries, all of which are worth immediate attention Pineapples of all grades are fairly active and are a safe purchase. Future peaches were more active during this week, especially seconds and pie peaches, which are offered at attractive prices. The crop looks safe at this time.

No. 2.

The latter end's season's cleaning up as indicated in our last advices has become more manifest during the past week The housecleaning period is on. Most packers consider it poor policy to carry over one season's pack into the other. These cleaning up lots bring to the surface a number of grades, qualities and condition. The week's business has shown a good demand for all offerings, though there seems to be nothing to indicate a boom at this late day. There has been a good steady demand for off standards and full standards as well. A number of off standard 3's have been cleaned up on the basis of 72½ cents, while full standards are running out steadily on the basis of 75 cents. A number of buyers are putting in their orders for a car or two from time to time; as most of these are repeated orders, indications would suggest a continuance of this course on into the new packing season. Buyers who a few weeks ago exhibited a preference for 200 and 300 case lots, or possibly a carload are now buying one or two cars instead, which would indicate more confidence. It seems to be pretty well conceded that the lowest has been reached and that the improved demand will maintain improved prices until all packers are entirely cleaned up, notwithstanding the misfortunes that have been experienced during the past ten months; it seems to be assured that spot tomatoes will be entirely cleaned up as far as first hands are concerned, with few stocks remaining on retailers' shelves and still fewer in jobbers' hands. Seconds, which have laid in a dormant condition for some time, are being sought after and a good demand can be reported for this size although it is difficult to locate as many full standard lots as were supposed before the inquiry began, since a number of packers have allowed their standards to be turned into off standards, on account of not being properly wintered, and, as a result, the offerings of full standards 2's are exceedingly limited and off standards are more in evidence At the same time, stocks are exceedingly light and it is more than probable that this size will be entirely cleaned up before new goods are forwarded on future contracts.

As a natural consequence, as soon as a little demand manifests itself in future tomatoes, the "reported" low prices heretofore familiar have vanished like clouds before the sun. Those who quoted at 55 and 75 cents are not occupying such prominent positions and 57½ and 77½-cent buyers are coming to the front with surprising rapidity. Buyers who were "offered" at the former price are now "buying" at the present price and packers who formerly holding at the latter price are now hesitating before they take further business, intimating that 2½ cents advance is due. Indications point to a liberal buying and a quick absorption of all future offerings on the basis of 57½ and 77½ cents within the next ten days, and once the buying fever has gotten in its work, there is a strong possibility of all offerings being absorbed on this basis and a more comfortable feeling is evident among packers who have not, up to the present time, booked quite as many future orders as they have desired.

The season has been favorable—most certainly so for tomatoes and peas, and yet one of Baltimore's largest pea packers reports this as being the shortest pea season for years and from reports emanating from other reliable sources, there is every indication that these advices are regretfully correct. Just why peas and tomatoes can be short when the weather is favorable is unanswerable; at the same time, cold facts are indisputable and such seems to be the condition, as far as peas are concerned this season. Whether tomatoes will follow the same tactics is not yet assured, although no guaranties are offered by any one, if such might be the case. Notwithstanding these conditions, standard early June peas are still obtainable at 80 to 85 cents, with seconds at 75 cents. Under these conditions, such prices would seem most attractive.

It has been difficult to fill orders for spot corn on the basis of previous prices and it is now necessary to decline orders for shoepeg standard corn under 65 cents, f. o. b., with fancy grades at 75 cents. Southern Maine style corn seems a trifle stronger, with the possibility of somewhat higher prices in the near future. The volume of business for the week is somewhat larger than any week previous for a long time and indications point to more satisfactory prices, at least as far as holders are concerned, later on.

Future corn continues firm at advanced quotations with little inclination among packers to book business of any magnitude. As early buying was liberal, the majority of packers seem content to rest on their oars and await further developments, although it is generally admitted that the odds are against them.

Spices.

The market is rather active, with a steady improvement in consuming demand. Stocks continue unusually small, and inasmuch as all prices are in reduced supplies, we think it will result in some sharp advances ere long.

Pepper.—Some recent heavy arrivals have been taken up from steamer's dock, leaving spot stocks very small. Futures are firmer and the present low prices are attracting attention, and pepper has been moving in a very satisfactory way.

Cayennes.—Prices are somewhat firmer for spot goods and future advances are looked for.

Cloves.—Practically unchanged during the week. Some large buying has been noted.

Pimento (Allspice).—Good quality is scarce and prices are somewhat higher.

Mace.—Demand much better and should continue so during the summer.

Nutmegs.—Former low prices prevailing. This is strictly a buyer's market. There is a great scarcity of some grades.

Cassias.—Saigon is very scarce at present. Batavia in good demand at very firm prices. China is selling in a most satisfactory way and prices are tending upward.

Gingers are much firmer, due to scarcity.

Seeds.—Cables just received report only moderate crops of Caraway and Poppy seed. Celery and Mustard are steady, but unchanged. Seeds for pickling will now be in good demand.

MARKET NOTES.

The first new raspberries are in market from New Jersey and range from 7 to 8 cents per pint. The demand is fair. Strawberries are ending their season and range from 3 to 16 cents, the latter being for Pennsylvania fruit. North Carolina blackberries range from 11 to 13 cents and huckleberries about the same. New Jersey has begun to ship huckleberries.

All the corn in market is from the extreme South and averages $2.50 per crate. The demand is only fair.

California cantaloupes range from $4 to $7 per crate and Floridas $1 to $2.50. The demand is fairly good.

Florida is still the only source of supply for watermelons and the price ranges from 15 to 35 cents. The demand is good.

Peaches are in large supply, all being from Georgia, and ranging from $1 to $1.75 per crate. They have been lower.

Mississippi tomatoes are in heavier supply than ever before. In two days the receipts in Philadelphia have been 28 cars. The price averages 65 cents per crate. Floridas range from $1.50 to $1.75 and are in fair sale.

Lima beans are scarce and practically none are coming forward.

String beans are coming from New Jersey and Virginia. The price ranges from 75 cents to $1 and the demand is good.

Peas are still high, though the price has declined somewhat, and is now 80 cents per basket. This is a drop of about 20 cents. The demand is good.

Cherries are almost glutted. The price ranges from 4 to 12 cents per pound. The quality is good and the demand fair.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Columbus, Kan., June 3, 1908.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—An opinion on subject matter at least. Am afraid your opinion of the work of this country paper would not do to print. This, of course, is an announcement of a new store. Yours truly,

J. T. BROWN.

The advertisement inclosed with the above measured 8 inches single column, and appeared to be placed in the paper in the midst of pure reading matter. Here it is photographically reproduced.

In my judgment it ought to be made a crime to print a public newspaper on such paper as has been used here. I can understand why some papers like the New York "World" or "Herald," with enormous circulations, cannot afford to use anything but a medium grade of paper, because their paper bills would swamp them. But even they would throw up their hands at the paper this Kansas journal has used. Not even the country paper has any excuse for using such trash as this. If it is too poor to use decent paper, it is too poor to live. No form of printing can look anything less than hopelessly poor and cheap on paper like this. For that reason Mr. Brown's advertisement looks grimy and smutty and poor in every way. Half the letters are filled up with ink and altogether the effect is one to sicken the soul. This, of course, is not in the least Mr. Brown's fault; it is the fault of the printer absolutely.

The wording of this advertisement is good. It is a little drawn out—for instance the third point really belongs to the first. The statement that the stock was new could very easily have been followed with a sentence or two as to the brightness and freshness of the goods, because they are new. The second point is all right, but I should have made it a little clearer. I have rewritten it below:—

> Second.—We hunted hard for the lowest possible price and then paid spot cash. That gives us a big advantage over our competitors, for no merchant who buys his goods on credit can possibly sell as cheaply as he who buys for cash. Test that for yourself.

In my judgment the fourth point, about coffee, is too general. Give examples of the "tested and known" grades. Say, "for example," take our Mo-Ja blend; a blend of the finest private growth Java and fancy Arabian Mocha. This is our very best coffee. Reaches the limit of aromatic deliciousness. Forty cents a pound." An idea might also be given of the cheapest grade you handle. These would have made the coffee talk specific.

I am not very well posted on tea, but I believe there are several incorreet names in point five. For instanee, "Hoochon," I think is wrong; it ought to be, if I am right, "Howchow" or "Foochow." I also believe "Ping Sine" should have been "Ping Suey." I make the same suggestion regarding the tea advertising that I did for coffee: I should have quoted and described one or two representative grades.

BROWN'S NEW GROCERY.

Some Phases of the Grocery Business in which We Excel.

FIRST, Our stock is absolutely new—every dollar of it received within the last thirty days from the best wholesale houses and manufacturers in the west.

SECOND, It was bought for spot cash at lowest possible prices, and we are therefore prepared to supply the needs of our friends and customers at lower prices than can many of our competitors.

THIRD, Rusty cans, soiled labels and shelf-worn packages are a certain sign that the quality of the goods has deteriorated. Our goods are all bright, clean and fresh, and are certain to please the most careful housewife.

FOURTH, Our Coffee Department is complete with all grades of the best selected coffees that money will buy, and we can please you with any quality from 15c all the way along to 35c per pound. We do not buy from salesmen just because they are "good fellows". We buy only tested and known grades that will make one love his breakfast cup of coffee better than ever. Let us make you happy with a trial purchase of our coffee.

FIFTH, Our Tea Department has received the same care that we have given all other departments of our store. Our green teas are selected from the best grown in the Moyune, Hoochon and Ping-Sine gardens. Our Japan teas from the Mori and Kobe gardens and our English Breakfast tea from the Icheng gardens. All from the best selections of the best tea producing countries. For a good cup try us.

SIXTH, We are applying our brain, as well as our muscles, to our business and are here to please.

BROWN'S NEW GROCERY.

Money Tightness May Curtail Tomato Pack.

Lack of Profit in Business, at Present Prices, Leads Men Who Finance Packers to this Year Go Slow.

While the prospects for a large tomato crop are good, it is not quite so certain that the pack will be large. The acreage has been somewhat reduced, though probably not enough to materially affect the output. The main reason why the production may be reduced is that the average packer always needs to borrow money in order to finance himself in buying cans, etc., and this year there seems to be so little profit in the tomato prospect that money is tight.

What is meant is this: The packers have contracted to pay from $9 to $10 a ton for tomatoes, and at that price they claim that it is impossible to pack tomatoes under 75 cents a dozen. To-day's selling price is only 75 cents, so that money lenders cannot seem to see much chance for profit. By reason of their refusal to lend, it is said that some packers have not yet purchased a single can.

At the same time, while the above seems logical, it is totally impossible to forecast the tomato market with any degree of accuracy, and in spite of all contrary conditions, no one would be surprised to see a very large pack.

New Food Regulations for Louisiana.

The Louisiana State Board of Health, at a recent session, finally adopted the regulations governing the State pure food law, which is to be enforced under the immediate supervision of the Board on and after October 1st next, unless changes are authorized by the Legislature now in session. The code, as finally passed upon, affected every food, drug and drink industry in Louisiana. Some of the provisions are radical.

A Welcome Waits

In these sightly boxes are packed the old-fashioned Georges Codfish which a good many disappointed consumers believe has disappeared from the market.

Heavy, meaty, pure white flakes, tender and tasty—the kind of fish we used to have before hake and haddock came in as a substitute. Packed usually in three lb. boxes, sometimes in two lbs., less often in ten lbs., and very occasionally in one lb. Heavy waxed paper between fish and box, neatly trimmed, square cut and handsomely faced.

There is a welcome waiting in your town for old-fashioned codfish.

Question: "Inquirer," Pa.—I have a judgment on a customer who works for a company located here, and whose main office is in New York State. Will it be legal for me to sell or assign the judgment to someone in New York and have them attach his wages in the New York office, and that office in turn pass it over to the Pennsylvania office here for final disposition?

Answer.—In this case the proper course is to get judgment in Pennsylvania, and then transcript the record of the judgment to New York State. If it can be successfully maintained that the New York concern is really your debtor's employer, and owes him any money, you can issue an attachment from the New York courts against the employer as garnishee. You do not need to assign the judgment to any other person in order to do this; it can be your own action from start to finish. The attachment, however, would have to remain in New York State; it could never get directly or indirectly into Pennsylvania, because attachment of wages here is illegal. Furthermore, the attachment could be defeated in New York if the concern there could certify that your debtor was not their employee, but the employee of the Pennsylvania department.

Question: * * *, Pa.—Inclosed please find copy of lease which asks for $14 a month for first year and $14.50 for next four years. The owner says he never got more than $14 a month in those four years. When the five years were up the parties who leased property did not ask for the extension. None of the parties ever lived in the building, but was what you may call a silent partner. On August 12, 1905, Mr. Lesher, the tenant named in the lease, sold the stock to me, gave me possession and left the place. I am paying the rent to the owner, and he never inquired whether I paid any rent or not. Things changed, he became an enemy and now sends me a quit notice dated May 11, 1908, to leave August 12, 1908. On the quit notice he calls me a sub-tenant. Sometime before he sent the quit notice I secured a lease from the actual owner of the property which I now occupy. I have made improvements, such as building a warehouse, changing a wareroom to a kitchen, papered and painted other rooms, etc. Now, is the inclosed lease good, or is my lease good which I secured sometime before I received the quit notice, or is neither of them good? Please let me know at once. I am in possession which, according to records, says that the party who wants to get me out made out a fraudulent personal property return dated April 21, 1903. Is he yet punishable by law, or would the limitaion law excuse him?

Answer.—This question is not stated at all clearly, and it is therefore going to be difficult to answer. The lease in question is dated October 7, 1897, between A and B, and covers certain property for five years, with privilege of an extension of fifteen years more. As I understand the query, the lessee or tenant stayed on the premises until the lease had expired, and nearly three years more, or until August 12, 1905, but did not claim the extension of fifteen years. That constituted him a tenant from year to year from October 7, 1902, the expiration of the lease, to August 12, 1905, when he sold out to this correspondent and left.

From August 12, 1905, until the present time, then, I understand that this correspondent has been in possession of the premises. I gather that the tenant under the original lease now makes the claim that the possession still belongs to him, that this correspondent is a subtenant, and orders him from the premises. The correspondent, however, has a lease from the owner, and he asks whether he is bound by the quit notice or can stand on the lease which he himself obtained.

If this understanding of the case is correct, this correspondent, in my judgment, is perfectly safe. The old lease is dead. It expired on October 7, 1902, and from that time until August 12, 1905, the old tenant was simply a tenant from year to year. The relation from year to year ended when the landlord permitted him to remove on August 12, 1905, and certainly all vestige of it disappeared when the owner himself made a lease with this correspondent some time after that. In other words, the correspondent,

Roosevelt Will Discharge All Government Employees Who Don't Pay Their Bills

Says so Through Letter from Attorney General. How Congress Affected the Interests of the Retail Grocer. Scope of Reform in Handling of Specialty Orders.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio,
June 18, 1908.

According to the directions by resolution at our recent convention Messrs. Ericson, of Washington; Hedricks and Marshall, of Missouri; O. M. Kling, of Chicago, Ill., and the National Secretary called upon President Roosevelt at noon Monday, May 18th, to present to him the combined resolution of the grocers of Washington, D. C., and Colorado in regard to the collection of accounts from Civil Service employees to the amount of 10 per cent. and an order from the President compelling all employees of the Civil Service to pay their debts, and if they could furnish no satisfactory excuse it should be cause for their dismissal from the service of the United States.

The committee was received very cordially and much attention given to the request, and after some questions being asked by the President and some bills being presented against Civil Service employees by your secretary, which the President took occasion to look over very carefully, we were asked to leave any papers we might have and the matter would be taken up by the Cabinet on the following morning.

On Friday, the 23d, the following letter was received from the Attorney-General of the United States, which is self-explanatory:—

> Washington, D. C., May 23, 1908.
> Dear Sir:—The President directs me to acknowledge the receipt of joint resolution of the Denver, Colorado, and the District of Columbia Retail Grocers' Protective Association and to say that it would be inappropriate for the different departments to act as a collecting agency for debts. If, however, any of the subordinates of the respective Executive Departments are found to have failed to pay their just debts without sufficient excuse, that is regarded as a reason for their separation from the service.
> Yours respectfully,
> CHAS. J. BONAPARTE,
> Attorney-General of the United States.

Now that the United States Congress has adjourned, it may be well to look into results as far as the grocery interests of the United States are concerned.

Early in the session Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, introduced a bill which was commonly known as the Dating Bill.

Senator Beveridge has been urging on the Senate his bill providing for the dating of canned goods (meats) for the last two sessions of Congress, and will in the coming Congress introduce another bill along the same lines. We have kept in close touch with the committee having this bill in charge and were assured that the bill would not be reported without the officers of the National Association of Retail Grocers having an opportunity to be heard, and although we were assured time and time again that this would be the case, yet on the 21st of May, and a few days before adjournment, Senator Beveridge called his bill out of the hands of the committee and asked for an immediate hearing and passage of the bill. This was telegraphed to our office and every means was taken to prevent the hearing and passage of the bill. We are happy to announce, however, that the bill gave us no further trouble.

The late Representative Smith, of Illinois, had a bill for 1 cent postage in committee when he was taken sick and later died. This prevented anything further being done along the lines of 1 cent postage during the year.

Senator Dixon, of Montana, who fathered what was known as the Dixon Bill, requiring Civil Service employees to pay their just debts, did not again introduce his bill at this session, but the efforts of the different associations and the resolutions adopted at Boston and the visit of the National Committee to the President had the desired effect, and as stated in this bulletin, the President issued an order which will compel Civil Service employees to pay their debts under threat of separation from the service.

The amendment to the bankruptcy act which we had hoped would have been gotten out of the hands of the committee did not get a hearing, but we hope during the next session of Congress to be in a position where our bill will not only get a hearing, but will be placed in position for passage, and we believe if this is done that sentiment is strong enough to amend the bill as required by the National Credit Men's Association, the National Bar Association, the National Hardware Association, and the National Association of Retail Grocers. All these influences are at work in behalf of Senator Nelson's amendment to the extent that no one can take advantage of the bankruptcy law unless he owes more than $500. It is very evident that the law never was intended for the purpose for which it is being used, viz., to defeat the creditor for the payment of goods consumed.

The Postmaster-General's bill, introduced by Senator Burnham, extending the parcels post service along the rural mail routes was literally buried under tons of protests sent in by the merchants of the United States. We have every reason to believe that with a year or two of education the public will become better acquainted with this bill and there will be much more opposition than at present. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association convention, just adjourned, passed strong resolutions in opposition to the parcels post, and no doubt will give us their earnest support during the coming Congress.

The way in which the retailers rallied in opposition to this bill when first introduced was very assuring to the officers, and was conclusive proof that in times of danger the retailers are able to assert themselves in no uncertain terms.

The following agreement has recently been entered into between the Wholesale Distributers of Food Products and the New York Association of Manufacturers' Representatives covering specialty orders secured by manufacturers' salesmen and turned in through jobbers:—

AGREEMENT.

We, the undersigned wholesale distributers of food products and the New York Association of Manufacturers' Representatives, hereby agree as follows:—

The members of the New York Association of Manufacturers' Representatives guarantee that all orders bearing the stamp of the association are genuine. Also that should any such orders be proven non genuine and the goods refused and returned for that reason, the representative of the house taking such orders agrees to pay the wholesaler the profit which would have accrued to the wholesaler had the goods been accepted, providing, however, that the wholesaler immediately return the original order to the manufacturers' representative with explanation as to why the goods were refused.

The wholesale distributer agrees to send out notice to his customers of his intention to fill all orders so stamped, signed by the purchaser and that the goods will not be returnable.

The wholesale distributer further agrees to promptly deliver, without confirmation, all such specialty orders accepted by him bearing the official stamp of the New York Association of Manufacturers' Representatives.

The Association of Manufacturers' Representatives was formed to remedy the following abuses, as explained in a statement made by the association itself:—

The honest retailer complains of "crooked salesmen," who get his signature and then raise the order—or simply imitate his signature.

The honest salesman complains that many retailers give an order—and countermand it at once by phone; put a mark on it which means the same to their jobber; or, when goods are offered for delivery, refuse them and swear they never ordered any.

The honest manufacturer complains that 20 per cent. to 60 per cent. of his missionary orders are lost—and not on account of poor credit, either. He cannot distinguish between honest salesmen, who are mistreated, and dishonest ones whose work is rightfully refused.

This combination of circumstances makes jobbers wary of "special orders." Some have their salesmen "verify," and in one to four weeks (or never) the retailer is asked to "father" his order.

In the meantime he has naturally forgotten all the "Reason Why"—and an obliging salesman cancels the order for him.

To right all these various wrongs is less hard than it might appear. First, it means that all missionary orders must be signed by the retailer.

Second, it means that (if credit is O. K.) the jobber should make immediate delivery. Third, it means that bona fide signed orders must be accepted by the retailer when offered for delivery.

The wholesaler can safely deliver an order bearing our stamp at once; we guarantee it genuine, and will pay his full profit on it if it is otherwise, and the original order is returned with that indorsement.

It is then up to the salesman or up to the retailer.

Thus our aim is to protect the retailer from forged or raised orders; the wholesaler from countless annoyances; the honest salesman from losing his position by the misrepresentation of others, and the manufacturer from spending the maximum and realizing the minimum.

The above agreement should act as a caution to retailers. The proposition is to compel all retailers who give an order to specialty men to accept the goods and if they are financially responsible will be compelled to do so unless they can show that the order has been obtained through some undue influence or misrepresentation. Therefore, it is the duty of the trade press to bring this matter to the consideration of the retail dealer in all lines as well as the retail grocer.

New California Canned Goods Far Below Last Year.

California Association Names Figures Which in Some Cases are Hardly More than Half Last Year's Prices. All Grades Show Heavy Reductions.

The California Fruit Canners' Association, which controls the bulk of the production of California canned goods, treated the trade to a surprise on Monday last, when it named prices on the 1908 pack of fruits which were radically below the prices of 1907.

The 1908 prices on 3-pound extras, as compared with those of 1907, are as follows:—

	1908	1907
Apricots	$2.35	$3.00
Apricots, peeled	2.85	3.50
Apricots, sliced	2.85	3.50
Cherries, Royal Anne	2.85	3.50
Cherries, white		3.50
Peaches, yellow free	2.40	2.50
Peaches, lemon cling	2.60	3.00
Peaches, lemon cling, sliced	2.60	3.00
Peaches, White Heath	2.60	3.00
Peaches, White Heath, sliced	2.60	3.00
Pears, Bartlett	2.65	3.00
Plums, green gage, egg, gold drop, Damson	2.15	2.25

An even more radical difference is shown in the two years' prices of the 2½-pound extra standard grade. The figures are as follows:

	1908	1907
Apricots	$1.25	$2.10
Apricots, pealed	1.65	2.60
Apricots, sliced	1.65	2.60
Cherries, Royal Anne	2.00	2.85
Cherries, white	2.00	2.85
Peaches, yellow free	1.45	1.80
Peaches, lemon cling	1.60	2.15
Peaches, lemon cling, sliced	1.60	2.15
Peaches, White Heath	1.60	2.15
Peaches, White Heath, sliced	1.60	2.15
Pears, Bartlett	1.60	2.15
Plums, green gage, egg, gold drop, Damson	1.25	1.30

No 1 tall cans sliced lemon cling peaches are this year for extras $1.10, and for extra standards $1, against $1.35 and $1.25 respectively, last year.

The jobbing trade were badly bitten last year by the very high prices charged by the packers and some are carrying a stock over. Nevertheless, this year's prices are so low that probably a considerable trade will be done.

Peddling Tea Company Sues Cities of Ohio and New York States.

Suit has been brought by the Jewel Tea Co., of Chicago, against Tippecanoe City and the city of Troy, Ohio. Infractions of the Interstate Commerce Act are alleged. The plaintiff is a wholesale dealer in teas, coffees, baking powder, spices and other goods of the same character. It claims to have a number of agencies in various States, one of them at Dayton, Ohio, in charge of a superintendent. The latter in turn hires solicitors to take orders. One of the solicitors was arrested seven times in Tippecanoe City and another one once in Troy, each time for the violation of a city ordinance which requires that hawkers, peddlers or hucksters who sell or canvass for sale articles, goods, wares or merchandise must procure a license, the cost of which in Tippecanoe City is from 50 cents to $25 per day, and in Troy from $1 to $25 per day. Failure to procure such a license previous to soliciting imposes a penalty of arrest and a fine ranging from $5 to $25 for each offense. The issue is really a test of the legality of an ordinance passed at the behest of the local merchants and designed to put an end to the competition of out-of-town peddlers. The plaintiff contends that if the carrying out of the ordinances is persisted in it will necessitate the plaintiff to compete with the business houses of those cities which are not compelled to pay the license demanded. It is averred that by reason of the character of the business of the plaintiff company that its commerce is interstate, and that for this reason the Federal Court is asked to take cognizance of the interference imposed by the action of the authorities of the two cities mentioned.

Getting Pay for the Tomato.

Albany, N. Y., June 13, 1908.

To "The Stroller."

Dear Sir:—Here is a little problem in the moral side of business that I would like to have your always interesting opinion about. I confess I have puzzled over it considerable, without reaching any solution that satisfies me.

The question is this: Has a grocer any right where a customer gets the better of him in anyway on one transaction, to make it up by slipping in an extra charge sometime later? I believe it is the general custom of the trade to do that, and I have done it myself many times, and at first blush it would seem as if it was entirely right. But when I come to think about it more deeply I do not feel quite sure that it is.

I will illustrate my meaning with an incident that happened in my store the other day. A notoriously close customer came in and while there asked what she owed. Her bill was only a small balance, and amounted to 69 cents. She said, picking up a tomato, "I will take this and make it even 70 cents." The tomatoes I had priced at 18 cents a pound and the tomato she took was worth 3 cents, whereas she got it for 1 cent. I suppose I was at fault in not so stating at the time, but I am backward about doing such things and I let it go. Am I not justified in slipping in a charge of 2 cents some time later where it will not be noticed? The customer certainly owes me that amount of money. What do you think about it? Please omit my name if you publish this letter.

Yours respectfully,

* * * *

Hum!

When I first read this letter over I said to myself "sure, you have a right," but when I read it the second time and took time to think about it a bit, I found I wasn't so sure.

I'm pretty well convinced now that you haven't the right to do such a thing.

I know it's done though—done by everybody that can, when circumstances arise that make it necessary.

And there ain't a man who does it but that thinks it's exactly the right thing to do, and so I'm not very hopeful of convincing many that it ain't.

Undoubtedly the woman who pinched the 3-cent tomato for a cent owed you 2 cents at the time. But you can forgive her that debt, you know, just as you can forgive her any debt.

If you let her take it for a cent you've forgiven her the rest, and if you work it out of her sometime when she ain't looking I don't believe you're giving her a square deal. You're collecting a debt that don't exist.

You see, there was no excuse for you, my Albany friend, for letting that tomato go for a cent when the price you had fixed on it was 3 cents. "Backward about such things?" No man ought to be too backward to look after his own property. And if you are—and I want you to forgive me for saying this—why I'm afraid you're too backward to be in business.

The time to have made the old skinflint pay the 2 cents was at the time. Why, I believe I'd take particular delight in calling such people down. You can't hurt their feelings—they have no feelings. And unless you do stand up for your rights with such cattle they'll put it all over you.

If you let the proper time to go by to speak—if when she offers you a cent for a 3-cent tomato you say nothing, but let her take it, then you've sold it to her for a cent and you have no right to get the rest of it out of her afterward.

As a matter of fact, the only way you can get it out of her afterward is to overcharge her on something else. What would you call a jobber who deliberately overcharged you?

You say you can't always stand up for your rights in such cases. I say you can always stand up for 'em. Maybe sometimes you'll lose a little by doing it, but most times you won't.

Suppose you're caught making the overcharge—have you figured out what would drop on you then?

Why couldn't you have said to the tomato woman, when she brought out her 70-cent proposition:—

"I can't do that, Mrs. Skinflint, the price of the tomato is 3 cents."

Could anybody get on their ear at that?

She simply went away and gloated over you—you ain't in any doubt about that, are you? She knew as well as you did that the tomato was worth more.

Such people are always watching their chance to pull your leg, and they always have it on you for being so easy.

I remember, a lawsuit I was mixed up in once as a witness that bears on this case in a way.

A grocer I knew had a scrap with his clerk. He fired the clerk, but he refused to go until he got the balance of his wages. The grocer admitted he owed it, but said he'd pay it when he got —— good and ready.

The clerk simply walked behind the counter, opened the cash drawer, took what was coming to him and walked out.

The grocer had him arrested for stealing. I told him he was making a mistake—he couldn't do anything because the fellow had simply taken what belonged to him.

"You admit you owed it to him, don't you?" I asked him.

"Yes," said the grocer, "but my lawyer said he had no right to take it that way." So he had him arrested.

I thought the lawyer must be a fool, but I was the fool. When the case came up the court said no matter what the grocer owed the clerk, he had no right to take even a cent from the drawer. He could have brought a suit against him, he said.

Of course that case was a little different from this one, still it's a good deal like it, too, for it seems to show that even if the tomato woman did owe you 2 cents, you had no right to take it out of her pocket without letting her know.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Quick Lunch Window.

Cover the floor and background of your window with light-green crepe paper.

On the right hand side pile a number of piles of baked beans, three cans to a pile, and attach price tags to each pile.

On the left hand side place a number of glass pint jars filled with coffee, each one containing a different kind of coffee. Stand price tags on top of each jar.

In the centre stand a coffee pot. Procure a piece of fairly stiff wire and place in the spout in such a manner that about six inches stands up in a vertical line. Place loose cotton on this wire in such a manner as to represent steam. On the right, and a little more towards the front, place a cup and saucer, and in the same position on the left place a large can of beans in sauce.

Over the pile of beans suspend a large sign. Head it "Baked Beans," and underneath put the kinds and prices, and whether with or without tomato sauce.

Over the coffee suspend a sign printed in a similar manner and headed "Coffee."

In the centre, immediately over the coffee pot, suspend the following sign:—

For a Quick Lunch—
Baked Beans and Coffee—
We recommend ——'s Baked Beans
With or without sauce
10c. a Can
Monaro Blend Coffee
20c. a Pound

Suspend pink streamers cut from pink crepe paper from the top of the window to a strip nailed across the background two-thirds of the way up and from this strip to the floor of the window. This greatly improves the appearance of the window.

A Hot Weather Lunch.

Cover your window with green crepe paper and leave the background bare. Procure a small oblong table, about 12 x 30 inches, and two chairs to match at each end. Place in the centre of the window.

On the chair at the right of your table seat a doll with the right hand leaning on the table and appearing to hold a spoon. Cover the table with white crepe paper in imitation of a table cover. Set a cupful of tea on a saucer and place on the table so that the spoon will rest on it, and at the left of the doll set a glass dessert dish full of olives and pierce one with a fork and leave the fork rest in such a position as if the doll was about to take it.

In the space behind the doll place a large square piece of tissue paper and empty a quantity of mixed tea on it. Leaning against the background is the following sign:—

For Iced Tea
Get the Best—
That's Bungaloe
35c. lb. 9c. ¼lb.

In the centre of the space on the other side of the table place a white paper napkin or a flowered one. In the centre of the napkin place a large botttle of plain olives, the largest you have, and stand a sign alongside of it as follows:—

Tea and Olives
Set Olives on Ice
Four Hours* before using
Plain Olives, —, —, — and — c.
Stuffed Olives, —, —, — and — c.

Some Suggestions.

Cover the floor of the window with white crepe paper and leave the back bare. On the right hand side pile a number of piles of the different kinds of salad dressing and suspend a sign above them reading:—

For Fresh Lettuce
Get one of these dressings:
Heinz, 15c. Durkee's, 10c. and 25c.
Royal, 25c. Campbell's, 10c.

On the left hand side pile unsweetened milk in two piles and between the two piles stand the following sign:—

Fresh Berries and Fruit Always taste better with Unsweetened Milk
Pet, 11 cents a can Peerless, 5 cents a can

And in the centre lay a piece of plain white paper cut in the shape of a square, and on this lay a 10-pound bag of sugar in such a manner that the sugar is half in and half out of the bag.

Place a sign alongside headed:—

Best Granulated Sugar
6c. a lb. 17 lbs. for $1.00

For Berries—
Pulverized Sugar
7c. a lb. 16 lbs. for $1.00

The use of pink streamers against the background produces a good effect.

This display would fit well with the fruit display called "Just In," published in the "Grocery World" of May 25, 1908. The sugar may be omitted if desired and the salad dressings and milk be piled on each side of the wheelbarrow so that they are not out of sight.

Toasted Corn Flakes Kellogg Sued for Alleged Fraud.

One of the largest damage suits filed in the Circuit Court of Calhoun County, Mich., for some time has been brought against W. K. Kellogg, the Toasted Corn Flake man, and Dr. J. H. Kellogg. The declarations cover seven different counts, but all are brought for the one purpose, that is, that of recovering, in the aggregate, of about $20,000 damages, which the plaintiffs allege is due them for the alleged fraudulent sale of Peptol stock. The case grows out of the alleged fraudulent sale of stock of a subsidiary company to the Sanitas Nut Food Co., which was formed for the manufacture of Peptol, Pan Peptogen and Maltol. All of these products were a patent food, for which the claim was made that by their use thin people would take on weight. The declarations allege that the defendants induced the plaintiffs to purchase the stock on the assumption that the company was a money-making concern. The declaration further alleges that acting on this assumption some $20,000 worth of stock of the company was purchased by the plaintiffs. The company afterwards discontinued business, it is stated in the declaration, so the present suits are brought for the purpose of recovering the amount paid for the stock.

Do You Want Economical Delivery?

No grocer who can afford a delivery team can reasonably say he can't afford a Lindsley Delivery Car, because the car literally costs less than a good team, costs much less to operate and does twice the work.

It is actual economy to use a Lindsley Car. A boy can operate it and keep it in shape, and it will carry 1500 pounds thirty miles over rough roads on one gallon of gasoline, and do it day in and day out the whole year through.

More Coffee Suggestions.

Lancaster, Pa., June 15, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Having read with interest your answer to our friend from Washington, D. C., in regard to his coffee blend, will ask you to kindly allow me to butt in.

If he wants a good Java blend I would advise him to use the following formula, using all washed coffees: one-third Java, cost about 24 cents roasted; one-third Caracas at 18 cents roasted, and one-third Mocha seed Santos at 15 cents roasted, making a total cost of 19 cents. This blend has been tried for years and not found wanting.

As for a 20-cent coffee, why not use the old time blend of two-thirds Santos, say at 14 cents, and one-third Rio at, say, 10 cents roasted, which will give a fair profit.

You know to mix a Bogota and a Java together would hardly make a perceptible blend, as these coffees are too near alike in flavor. In fact, there was a time when Bogotas were largely sold for Javas.

Yours truly,
H. J. Gundaker,
Mgr. Coffee Department of M. S. Miller & Co.

Another Collection Agency.

Noxen, Pa., May 28, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—What do you know about the Standard Commercial Co., 741 Drexel Building, Philadelphia, Pa.?

I gave this company some business last fall. One man by the name of Ira Moe, who owed me $20.75, sent a check to the company for the amount and then he came and showed me the receipt for the money. Then I wrote to the company and asked them about it. They said they had the money and would send it in a few days. They did not send it and I asked them again, then they claimed they would make settlement early in February. I then told them if they didn't pay I would advertise them in the "Grocery World." This was about four weeks ago and they have not paid, and I don't think they intend to pay.

Yours truly,
A. L. Shaw.

The "Grocery World" has investigated the above case thoroughly, and it illustrates another phase of the difficulties of dealing with the average collection agency. The Standard Commercial Agency charges a membership fee of $15. When the writer brought the Shaw case to their attention they admitted collecting his $20.75, but said there was a dispute over whether his membership fee had been paid. If it had been paid, they admitted owing him the $20.75. If it had not been they owed him only $5.75. "But," said the writer, "in any event you owe him $5.75 and have owed it to him since last fall. Why hasn't it been paid?" No satisfactory answer was made. The writer then instituted an investigation to see if the membership fee had been paid. He found that it had been, and showed the concern the receipts. The agent who signed up Mr. Shaw and who had been claiming right along that it had not been paid had simply lied. Of course he may never have said it at all. The agency at last admitted that there was no longer any question that the full $20.75 was owed. They had previously given a check for the balance of $5.75, and "would give a check for the remaining $15 on Saturday." "You will give it now," said the writer, "or stand prosecution." After much vituperation they squeezed out the money then and there and the incident is closed.

The "Grocery World" has no evidence that the Standard Commercial Co. are actually dishonest, but this and previous cases furnish sufficient reason to state that they are outrageously slow in making settlements.

Upon request the Baltimore Retail Grocers' Association, which does a co-operative buying business under the name of the Baltimore Wholesale Grocery Co., answered this correspondent direct as follows:—

Gentlemen:—Answering yours of June 15th, would say that every member reaps the same benefit, according to his purchase. All applications for membership are submitted to our Wednesday night meetings for their acceptance or rejection; as to what they might do on an application situated as far away as you are, we are unable to say.

The "Grocery World" has published several articles recently on the benefits to be derived from co-operative buying, which we indorse and respectfully refer you to.

English Consumers Tiring of Our Canned Goods.

Demand for Canned Apricots, Pears and Peaches Fell Off Greatly in Last Two Years. Our Tomatoes Badly Packed and Being Ousted by Italian Brands. Canada Getting Canned Apple Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 18, 1908.

According to information received by the State Department this week English consumers are growing tired of American canned goods. At any rate, the last two years have witnessed a decided falling off in importations.

The shipment of apricots, pears and peaches to England in 1906, for example, aggregated 273,000 cases, while in 1907 only 161,000 cases were imported. This great deficiency naturally increased prices and lessened the demand. The unfavorable weather conditions for fruit growing in the United States in 1907 partially accounted for the decreased shipments. As the importation of apricots and peaches from the United States declined, there was a proportionate increase in the shipments from Spain and Portugal, where the fruit was of excellent quality. No pears, however, are shipped from these last-named countries to England.

During the past four years the prices of California canned fruit have advanced about 25 per cent. This has resulted in the extension of the fruit trade between England and Spain and Italy, which countries have the advantage of the United States in the item of cheap labor.

Tomatoes are imported in increasing quantities each year from Italy. The quality of these tomatoes is stated to be good and the prices low. It is suggested by one of the leading importers in Liverpool that the American tomatoes are frequently packed before they are fully ripe, and that this practice renders them undesirable for use. The Italian tomatoes are carefully selected, and are only packed after they have attained a ripe and rich color. The Consul suggests that if the American packers desire to increase their shipments of tomatoes to England they must exercise the greatest care in their selection and preparation for the English market.

Canned apples are being imported in increased quantities from Canada and are sold at successfully competitive prices with American apples. California apples packed in cases seem to improve each year, and the English demand for them is increasing, owing to the fine condition of the fruit and the excellent manner of packing. Last year the sale of California apples in England exceeded the sales of any previous year, and the testimony of all the fruit importers in Liverpool is that these apples are almost invariably fairly and properly graded, that the smaller apples are packed separately, and that the cases are so branded that the markings indicate the quality of the fruit. There is no doubt that if greater care were shown in the selection, grading and packing of American fruits there would be a gratifying increase in the English demand.

Butter Spreaders Free.

Time changes all things. It has completely changed our methods of living and surely added to our methods of eating. Time was when the human family would eat lying down. Now, in the rush, we're glad sometimes to eat standing up. Years ago, even a few years ago, no one dreamed of improving on the old standbys—the knife, fork and spoon—but even they have been improved upon, until now no up-to-date table is completely set unless there are four pieces at each plate, including the butter spreader.

The universal popularity of butter spreaders is attested by the enormous demand for them made upon jewelers and firms who handle them. It is so much neater to use a butter spreader.

A very attractive proposition has been made the trade by Armour & Co. recently on butter spreaders. With every two cases of Armour's extract of beef, the purchaser receives one-half dozen silver butter spreaders. They are the original Wm. Rogers & Son extra plate. One could not buy these anywhere for less than 50 cents each, and they are highly prized by the women folk.

This proposition has done wonders as a selling feature, as Armour & Co. have advertised extensively that they will give one spreader to any one sending in a cap from a jar of their extract of beef with 10 cents, to cover cost of mailing. It's the best offer for the trade that has appeared in some time, as the up-to-date public are providing their tables with this pretty and useful little silver spreader.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. Breckenridge.

Vermicelli.

Vermicelli is an Italian word, meaning little worms, from the Latin vermes (worm).

It is the commercial name of a popular form of Italian paste. It is made of the same materials and in the same way as macaroni—that is, by pressure through the proper shaped holes, only the pipe is made very small and threadlike, not much thicker than horsehair. (Those in the form of fillets or ribbons are termed "lazagnes.")

The long threads, as squeezed from the press, are dexterously twisted into small knots while moist and pliable, and these are afterwards dried slowly on paper.

It is mostly imported from Nervi, where there are several large paste factories, and comes in large cases, each holding 144 small chip boxes of about 4 pounds weight.

It should, of course, be free from mustiness, dampness and taint, and the drier and more brittle it is the better.

Vermicelli is commonly used in soups, broths, and for sweet puddings.

Vermouth.

A sort of bitters, or white liquor, made in Italy. It is composed of white wine, angelica, wormwood, and other aromatic herbs, and is much used as a stomachic. That from Turin is supposed to be the best.

Vichy Water.

The trade name of an alkaline mineral water from several springs in the valley of the Allier, near Vichy, in France.

The water is bottled and sent all over Europe; that bottled at the Grand Grille spring is the kind most frequently met with. It is only used as a beverage, and its principal constituent is carbonate of soda.

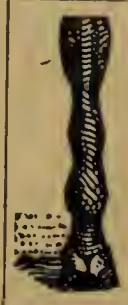
It is closely imitated by mixing 10 grs. carbonate of ammonia, 5¼ ounces bi-carbonate of soda, 6 drs. common salt, 25 grs. phosphate of soda, 4 scruples sulphate of soda, and 2 drs. of sulphate of potassa. Add half a gallon of water. Let it stand half a day, and then filter, and charge with 10 gallons of water.

Walnut Ketchup.

Usually manufactured from the brine in which green walnuts, while young and tender, have been preserved or soaked for some time previous to pickling.

This juicy liquor is merely boiled for about half an hour, along with a little ginger, pimento, cloves, and long pepper, a like quantity of malt vinegar is added, and it is then finally strained and bottled. A little burnt sugar coloring is generally added.

Sometimes ill-shaped, small, or damaged walnuts, either green or pickled, are smashed up and boiled in salt and water for the same purpose.



Of course, ripe and dried walnuts with hard shells are unsuited for making into ketchup, but green walnut husks are often used instead of the green walnuts. A few shalots, a little cleaned horseradish, and a little liver are often boiled along with the walnut liquor, to give body and flavor.

The use of iron utensils should be avoided. Iron spoils vinegar.

MAGAZINE NOTES.

Though not so well known as a novelist as her talented sister-in-law, Mrs. John Van Vorst has done some work in this line which has elicited high praise. What is probably her greatest novel is published complete in the July "Lippincott's," under the title "Second Quality." The leading character is a middle-aged American who has been so busy amassing millions that he has found no time to cultivate friends. When he finally decides to give up active business life, he goes abroad, where his loneliness palls upon him. To his delight he soon makes the acquaintance of a number of people whom he believes to be members of the innermost social circles. The list includes a princess and several other titled personages, but somehow they do not "ring true" to the bluff, simple-hearted American, and in the end he is forced to acknowledge that after all they are "second quality." But all is not glitter and sham in his experiences, for there is a pretty love story woven through the plot. Mrs. Van Vorst is familiar with Nice, Monte Carlo, and the other places she describes, so she is enabled to give the reader a most interesting and convincing picture of them. Dorothea Deakin, Will Levington Comfort, Clifford Howard, Caroline Lockhart, Karl von Kraft, and others contribute short stories, and there are a number of excellent special articles as well. Another feature, and not the least popular one, is "Walnuts and Wine." There are few who haven't heard of "Walnuts and Wine," even among those who do not read "Lippincott's" regularly, for it is probably the most widely quoted humorous section published in America.

THE FINEST MATCH MADE

The ideal modern match is the Ohio Blue-Tip Safety Match. While you can strike it on anything, it is a Safety Match because you can strike only the tip.

Far better than other double-tip matches, because it never gets soft, never flares up spontaneously, never drops or flies around.

The finest match made by all odds.

The first man who tried to catch a Fly, did it without and the Fly got away. That's why we are bothered with millions of them to-day. BROWN'S FLY COIL is the thing to catch these millions with, because the Flies can't leave it alone and can't get away from it. Will catch more Flies to the square inch than any other Fly-catching device extant. It is neat, clean, hygienic and effective. Anyone can see its good points at a glance, so it sells "like hot cakes." Hang one up and try it on your Flies and your trade.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

Something New from An Old House

¶ Our Café des Gourmets Coffee is our latest effort to please our friends and to give them a highly perfected blend at the popular price of 25 cents a pound.

¶ It is packed in handsomely labeled, air-tight tins so as to protect its freshness and natural aroma.

¶ Café des Gourmets is a satisfying drink and will please your most exacting trade, conforming to the usual high standard set by Wilde's, and is backed up by their reputation gained through more than 90 years of fair business dealings. A trial will prove its worth.

DOLLARS IN RETAILERS' POCKETS

Hundreds of Manufacturers and Jobbers of High-grade Standard Selling Goods are offering

UNIVERSAL COUPON CERTIFICATES TO RETAIL DEALERS

as an inducement to push the sales of their goods to consumers. These certificates are given at no increase in the selling prices, or cheapening of quality in their products, but are intended solely as a compensation for your assistance, and are exchangeable through us for valuable and useful merchandise, of which the following list represents a few of the

1000 ARTICLES TO CHOOSE FROM

Pianos	Harness	Buggies	Silverware	Typewriters	Scales	Lamps
Coffee Mills	Safes	Leather Goods	Strong Boxes	Wagons	Trucks
Desks	Tools	Chinaware	Jewelry	Furniture	Sporting Goods
Rubber Goods	Watches	Cut Glass	Toilet Articles	Trunks	Rugs	Clocks

Any retailer taking advantage of this liberal offer is simply putting extra dollars into his pocket, as the cost to him is absolutely nothing but represents a saving of 15 to 60 per cent. over the cost if he were to buy them in the regular retail way.

Be an Expert on Hams

YOU will be surprised to see how many hams you can sell by being able to guarantee every one. Each and every one of SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS will back up the strongest guarantee you can give it.

Is there any sense in selling ham that nobody can guarantee?

You can satisfy your trade and increase it by selling SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS because their quality never fails.

We keep PREMIUM HAMS well advertised, and that makes them easy to sell.

Gentlemen:—We wish to compliment you upon the eight Mahogany Show Cases which you have just installed in the Acker's Quality Shop. The workmanship, style and finish are equal to any we have ever seen, and they have excited universal admiration among the many other attractive features of this salesroom.

You are at liberty to exhibit them to anyone interested in show cases.

Yours, very truly,

What About Bad Years?

Bought all your canned goods yet? Will you get 100 per cent. delivery—all you bought? Maybe you will this year, because crops look good, but how would it have been if crops had been bad?

Isn't it fairer to buy of the concerns who deliver 100 per cent. in bad years as well as in good? Blue Bell and Clover Farm canned goods are delivered that way.

Good goods, too—none better packed in all Maryland.

LOWNEY'S COCOA has maintained its high quality unimpaired regardless of the rise in the price of cocoa beans. For years now it has appealed to the best trade on its merits and become A STAPLE ARTICLE with a sure demand, constant and growing. Wide advertising in street cars, newspapers and magazines will go on pushing, pushing, pushing. It is a safe investment, and PAYS A FAIR PROFIT.

LOWNEY'S PREMIUM CHOCOLATE for cooking is of the same superfine quality.

The Man Behind the Tin

When you sell Karo Corn Syrup you entirely relieve yourself of responsibility as to the quality. We make Karo; we pack Karo in the sealed sterilized tins in which it reaches your customer. If there is anything wrong, it is our mistake and we'll make it good the minute we're told.

There will be nothing wrong, however, Karo Syrup is a rich, smooth delicious table syrup that never varies in quality a hair's breadth.

Three sizes—10, 25 and 50 cents, a good slice of which is yours. Any jobber.

The Glenny Wrench Jar Cap

A PURE FOOD, COMMON SENSE FRUIT JAR CAP, made from heavy TIN PLATE, especially treated for us.

It does not require a liner, therefore has none, for the dirt and MICROBES to hide behind.

Packed in cartons of one dozen and from 60 to 120 cartons in a case.

PRICE $1.00 per gross F. O. B. Cincinnati, rubbers not included.

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

The Pressing & Orr Co.
NORWALK, OHIO

Like to Eat Husks?

A meal of corn hulls would be like a meal of husks, and yet every brand of corn but Winorr cans the hulls with the kernels. Naturally not as bad as the hulls alone, but it's common sense that it takes away some of the goodness.

A special process we have removes the hulls from the corn we afterward pack under the brand Winorr. The result is a brand of unequalled tenderness, succulence and deliciousness. Try this on your trade.

We also pack a full line of finest quality Berries and Vegetables, moist and condensed Mince Meat, Catsup and Salad Dressing.

We are the largest canners of Sauer Kraut in the United States.

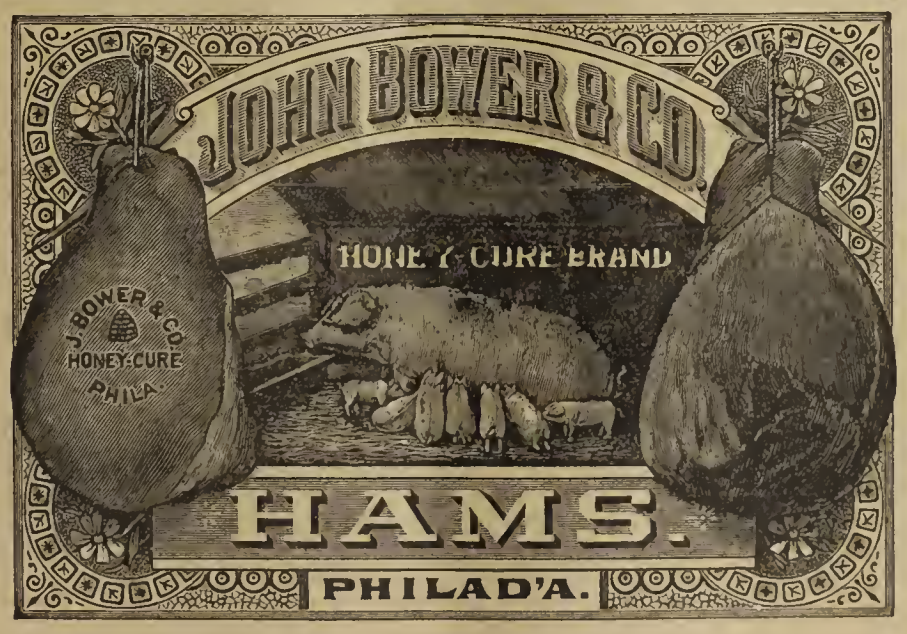
Fine Fix-tures Make Fine Sales

Almost every grocer sells loose pickles or loose olives. Usually they're kept in a keg somewhere.



Doesn't it stand to reason that a fine fixture displaying such things where they could say a word for themselves would make sales better.

Take our inexpensive 5-jar fixture, oak or cherry, and with nickel trimmings. Very handsome, very ornamental, very capable in influencing the sale of goods.

Fine fixtures make fine sales.

Look At It and Taste It

The minute you see Nicelle Olive Oil you feel sure it's a high-grade article. The package is unique and exclusive—you can't associate poor goods with it.

Taste Nicelle Oil, and you know it's high grade. Nowhere else have you met that rich smoothness, that delicate yet penetrating olive flavor.

Women have told us repeatedly that their salad dressing came quicker and better with Nicelle Oil than with any other brand they ever tried.

Give it a chance for your own good.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

No Loss on Loose Goods

¶ Don't have goods loose and let dirt, bugs and hungry customers eat up half your profits. A store like this saves time hunting for goods that ought to be in sight at all times, pleases customers and disappoints the poor little bugs. Our catalogue shows other stores we have fitted up. Send for it.

COFFEE AND TEA BINS THAT PROVE THEIR "METAL"

Picture your store fitted out with Tea Canisters and Coffee Bins like these. They are trade winners. Effective store decoration brings the people in—your sales force do the rest.

When installing Coffee Bins, get the kind that will stand the racket—you'll never have to replace them. Our bins are constructed of the heaviest tin.

And for Over Fifty Years They Have Proven Their "Metal"

Sugar's Share in the Big Fruit Crops

¶ Unless all signs fail we are going to have very large crops of all fruits this year.

¶ That means lots of preserving and a big demand for sugar.

¶ As a rule grocers don't look forward with much interest to a "big demand for sugar," because it means increased work at no profit.

¶ What shall it profit a man if he sells a hundred barrels of sugar and gets back only what he paid for it?

¶ Sell Franklin Carton Sugar instead of bulk sugar and your views will change, for there is no work required in selling Franklin Carton Sugar. You don't even need to wrap it. And there is a good profit, and what there is you can't waste through the overweight—"good measure"—that always goes with sugar in bulk.

On the Streets at Night

You occasionally get on the street at night, and every now and again you stop before the brilliant windows of the department stores.

What makes them brilliant? The goods displayed? It is the abundant light, under which almost any goods would make a brilliant window. You wouldn't be half so well interested in the window if it wasn't so bright with light.

Apply this logic to your own store. Is it so bright with light that it interests people in the streets at night?

If it isn't we can make it so, very inexpensively.

The largest building of its kind, given up exclusively to the grocery business, in this city, and said to be the largest in the world. An eight-story and basement building as near perfectly fire-proof as human ingenuity has conceived of.

While the building is of re-inforced concrete construction, an additional precaution has been taken against fire danger by the installation of a sprinkler system with a reservoir capacity of 140,000 gallons. The small rate of insurance charged, places the building in the no-fire-danger class.

When it comes to handling great quantities of goods economically there are none to compare. Storage capacity, 2000 car loads. Railroad siding along entire Willow Street front. Shipping and Receiving platform of 20,000 square feet, and 15 freight elevators. Passenger elevator at N. E. Cor. of building, entrance on Noble Street. Main Office Eighth Floor.

Must Retailers Give Customers Notice of Coated Rice?

Question Raised by Wholesale Grocer. All Rice is Coated with Glucose and Talc. Federal Ruling Requires it to be so Labelled. The Retailer's Liability Under this Ruling and Under the State Law.

The "Grocery World" has had an inquiry during the week from a large wholesale grocery house concerning the sale by retail grocers of rice which is coated with glucose and talc. The question was whether the retailer is obliged to notify his customer that the rice he sold from broken packages is coated.

Practically all rice now sold is treated to a coating of glucose and talc in order to improve its appearance. So general is the custom that the Federal Food and Drug Board took notice of it not long ago by issuing a ruling that all rice so coated must have the fact revealed on the label. Under such conditions it could legally be sold.

Accordingly all packers of rice who obey the law now place somewhere on their package variations of the following:—

Rice Coated with Glucose and Talc. Wash Before Using.

This label is usually affixed by the packer upon the rice in 100-pound bags, for instance, and left on it by the wholesale grocer, who sells it to the retailer in the original package. Thus the packer and the jobber have both complied with the ruling, because both have given notice to their respective purchasers that the rice is coated.

The retailer now breaks the original package and resells the coated rice in 1-pound lots, 2-pound lots, and so on, as the case may be. Is he obliged to carry the notice of coating on to his customer? is the query, and the "Grocery World" thinks that in most cases he unquestionably is. Naturally, the retail grocer, no matter where he may be, is not responsible to the Federal law if he sells from a broken package within his own State. The ruling regarding coated rice is Federal only, so that it has no force within the borders of a State. Unless the State Food Department has issued such a ruling, the retailer is liable only if the sale of coated rice, without notice, is a violation of the law itself. In Pennsylvania the "Grocery World" believes such a sale to be a probable violation of that part of the act which calls a product adulterated if it is colored, coated or polished so as to appear better than it is. As nearly all other State food laws contain this same clause, there is a large chance that the sale of coated rice without notice is in violation of law almost everywhere where food laws are in force.

Now, if it be established that the sale of coated rice without notice is in violation of law, it follows as an inevitable conclusion that such sale by a retailer is just as illegal as a sale by anybody else. In other words, whoever sells coated rice, whether he be packer, jobber or retailer must give notice in some way to his buyer that the goods are coated with glucose and talc. In the retailer's case this could easily be done by putting rice in paper bags on which had been stamped some such statement as appears above.

Brazil Coffee Corner in Critical Position.

Various Financial Authorities Predict Terrific Collapse and Decline in Coffee Values. Over 8,000,000 Bags of Rio and Santos Coffees Held Off the Market. London's View.

It cannot be questioned that if the Brazil valorization scheme goes to pieces, as many authorities seem to expect, the world will witness the greatest slump in the values of Rio and Santos coffee that has ever occurred in the history of the industry. At the same time other grades would probably decline in sympathy. At the present writing the Brazilian syndicate is holding out 8,000,000 bags of coffee, mostly Santos, in order to keep the market from collapsing. If for financial reasons this coffee had to be thrown on the market, a terrific slump would result.

Most financial authorities condemn the plan unhesitatingly as being simply a corner, no type of which has ever succeeded. A typical expression is from the "London Financial News," a part of which is as follows:—

> The Brazilian Government has for some time been engaged in an attempt to maintain the price of coffee, and thereby to protect a great and vital national industry, by means of what is known as the valorization scheme. The idea, briefly outlined, was to hold the vast existing stocks until there should be either a failure or, at least, a shortage of the Sao Paulo output. If that were to happen the accumulated stocks in the hands of the Government and its allies might be absorbed. Meanwhile the international coffee market might be "nursed," and by means of what was called the "propaganda" the consumption of Brazilian coffee, as well as the general interest in Brazilian affairs, might be stimulated. Such a scheme, of course, could not be realized without money, but it was believed and not believed in vain, that there were parties whose interests were sufficiently wrapped up with the prosperity of Brazil to induce them to assist either with their money or their influence, or, better still, with both.
> By whatever name this scheme may be called, it is, in fact, nothing but a gigantic corner; but it is a more perilous operation than a corner in wheat, copper, or any other of the commodities with which, from time to time, bold speculators have concerned themselves. The control of the available supply is sufficient for their purpose. They do not depend for their subsistence upon the continual increase of the stock; in fact, they desire to prevent it, as far as they can. But in the case of the Brazilian Government, a considerable section of the nation (including its wealthiest State) is dependent upon the produce and sale of the very commodity whose supply the Brazilian Government is anxious to control and check. It has embarked upon the perplexing task of reconciling the restrictive interests of a cornering syndicate with the expansive instincts of a powerful group of its members, who, however anxious they may be to further the schemes of the partnership as a whole, are, as producers of the commodity which is the subject to the corner, liable to the continuous and inexorable pressure of the status quo—the necessity of selling their product in order that they may subsist on the proceeds.
> The outstanding position at the moment seems to be that about £16,000,000 has been advanced by various persons on 8,000,000 bags of coffee. Great secrecy has been observed with reference to the identity of the lenders; but the general opinion is that the Arbuckles and the Sielcken and Crossman group, on the other side of the Atlantic, and certain French institutions on this side originally came in. The Netherlands Bank was asked to help, and refused. Messrs. Rothschild themselves at first took the view that the whole valorization programme was economically unsound, and for some time refused to countenance it. More recently they are understood to have modified their views, and the recent issue of £3,000,000 of Brazilian treasury bills, as well as the division between New Court and Paris of the custody of Brazilian financial resources on this side, are among late developments of the policy. It is at this critical moment that the Bank of France has announced its refusal to make advances on Brazilian coffee warrants at a higher price than 40 francs per 50 kilos. The decision is, no doubt, a consequence of recent reports that the Brazilian Government has been quietly getting rid of some of its huge stocks of coffee at points in the interior of Europe. At any rate, it has brought an immediate appeal to the Bank of France from Sao Paulo—the centre of the great coffee State—which shows only too plainly that the grave peril of the situation is realized. If the Brazilian Government is "getting out," if the Bank of France is "hedging," and if the current coffee crop, instead of being the failure that was hoped for, is of fair magnitude, we may well be on the verge of the crash. The lenders who have advanced money to assist this gigantic corner will not sit still while their margins disappear. They will dump their security on the tottering market, and Brazil will be face to face with a financial crisis of the first magnitude.

No More Freight to be Received Unless Consignee's County is Named.

Railroads have Lost Money by Shipping Goods to Wrong County, where there Were Two Towns of the Same Name, and to Protect Themselves the Receiver's County Must Always be Given After July 1.

The railroads have sent notice to all freight shippers that after July 1, 1908, the consignee's county must in every case be given in the shipping directions. No goods will be received for shipment where this is not done.

The reason for this innovation is supposed to be the large number of damage cases and claims which have been brought against the railroads on account of shipping goods to the wrong point, where there were two towns of the same name. In order to avoid these mistakes in the future each shipper of freight must, after July 1st, not only state the consignee's town, but his county as well. It will simplify the matter considerably if retailers in ordering goods of wholesalers or manufacturers will themselves specify the county.

Organized Pittsburg (Pa.) Retailers Run Down Process Butter Frauds

Secretary Kane, of the Merchants' Protective Association, Finds Gross Violation of Law and Brings Action Himself. Campaign Will be General. Retail Grocers to be Protected Against Illicit Competition of Fake Butter Men.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa., June 25, 1908.

I have, as secretary of this association, received a large number of complaints from the retail grocers in Pittsburg, Allegheny and vicinity, complaining that the butter, egg and cheese dealers, who are known as the butter dealers, making a specialty of this line, have been greatly injuring their creamery butter business, as they are selling what is supposed to be pure creamery butter for less than the retail grocers could buy pure creamery butter at wholesale. After careful investigation I invited Dr. James F. Edwards, Superintendent of the Bureau of Health of this city, to make an inspection tour with me through the Northside Market to see what these butter dealers were selling for pure creamery butter. Out of ten stands in the market house we found eight offering for sale renovated or process butter as pure creamery butter at 28 cents a pound. These butter dealers have been in the habit of emptying 60-pound tubs on the lid of the tubs and displaying it on the counter in cold weather. Some had these pyramids of butter labeled "Special," "Extra Fine" and other placards, which we found out, after thorough investigation, that the butter so offered was adulterated or renovated butter. I also found that every one of these butter dealers were exposing for sale one, two and three-pound prints, as well as white tub oleo, without having the placard on each open tub, package or parcel, as required by the Act of 1901. In another section of the city, on one street, out of seven butter stores I found six selling tub colored oleo for creamery butter at 28 cents. After carefully submitting this matter to Mr. E. D. Miller, a Deputy Food Commissioner in this district, I decided to take up this line of prosecution myself, as it seems to me that it is impossible for fifteen men in the State Department of the Dairy and Food Division to protect the 60,000 retail grocers in Pennsylvania. We have in Pittsburg and Allegheny, which is now the North Side of Pittsburg, over 2,700 retail grocery stores, and I find it absolutely impossible for Mr. Miller to look after Allegheny County, as well as two or three other counties, and protect the retail grocers against these unscrupulous butter dealers.

I brought information against George R. Hanny, a retail butter dealer in the Allegheny Market, before Alderman George Cain, of the North Side, on the 21st day of May. At the hearing before the alderman Mr. Hanny was held for court under $500 bail. He was tried before the criminal court of this county before Judge John M. Kennedy, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty, as indicted. Under this Act of 1901 the minimum fine on the first offense is from $100 to $300. Judge Kennedy instructed Mr. Hanny to appear before him on July 1st for sentence. After my investigation of these butter violators I have decided to stand by and protect every retail grocer subscriber to your paper in Allegheny County and will prosecute every butter violator reported to me by any of the retail grocers in Allegheny County, whether they are members of this association or not.

I noticed in the last report that I sent you regarding these butter dealers that your paper published them as being retail grocers. These merchants are not retail grocers, but handle butter, eggs and cheese in competition to the retail grocers.

Joseph C. Kane,
Secretary Merchants' Protective Association.

The Currant Protest. Brooklyn Dealers Postpone Minimum Price Issue Till Fall. New York Retailers Will Probably Espouse the Quantity Purchase Principle. Looking Up Fake Butter and Egg Concerns. Poor Buchan Soap Settlement. Small News of the Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, June 26, 1908.

That this country is the dumping ground of poor qualities of Greek currants is the claim made by a number of the principal importers who are trying to change this condition of affairs. Among those engaged in the movement to get better currants for this country are Austin, Nichols & Co., Francis H. Leggett & Co., Hills Bros. Co. and other importing and grocery firms

A petition was sent this week to the State Department at Washington asking that suitable representations be made to the Greek Government on the subject. It is assumed that the Government of Greece has power to give relief, since it chartered the Privileged Currant Co., and supervises its affairs, having a representative in the Board of Directors and sharing in the profits. The company is said to have been formed to absorb any surplus in the crop and to regulate conditions.

The importer is helpless in many cases, it is set forth in the petition, because sales are made before arrival against the shipments, and so he has to accept even most inferior grades. Besides reducing the average quality of the currants shipped here, it is claimed, the chartered company has brought about the doubling of the prices.

Definite action on the minimum price question is not to be taken by the United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn until September. The subject came up for a brief discussion at the meeting this week and it was deemed the better course not to take any position at this time. Several influential members are quite actively trying to have this association line itself with the associations of Manhattan and the Bronx in opposition to anything like minimum or uniform prices.

It is also said that the associations in this city are likely to become more and more determined in standing by the quantity price plan in buying from manufacturers. The principle upon which many members are now agreed is that the manufacturer should look to the size of the order in making the price and should sell to all buyers who have the money to pay for the goods whether they are jobbers or retailers.

Another expansion in the business of L. J. Callanan, of Vesey street, will be made shortly. He leased last week the basement and sub-basement of 39 Vesey street, adjoining the building which he owns and occupies at Nos. 41-43. Workmen are now connecting the basements and the additional room below the surface will enable him to have his packing and shipping departments there. He will move the shipping office and freight elevator from the front of his store and thus will gain an additional window in front, giving three windows in all. Practically the entire front is of glass and the windows may be pushed up out of the way so that in summer the front may be made as open as is desired.

The liquor and cigar displays will be increased. The order department will be rearranged and an electric elevator will be installed for its convenience.

Mr. Callanan has also decided to build up some lines which he could not do before because of lack of room and to develop the department idea in the store, making sharp classifications in the various kinds of goods and placing a man in charge of each who will be held responsible for the condition of the stock.

In response to inquiries from York, Pa., the police have been looking into the affairs of the United Butter and Egg Co., which has headquarters at 337 East 67th street, in this city, and was moving several hundred crates of eggs to 108 East 119th street at the time that the officers sought information as to its affairs. The police say that complaints have been made that the company obtained butter and eggs valued at many thousands of dollars from farmers in Pennsylvania and New Jersey without paying for the stock. Philip Cohen seemed to have something to do with the company and the officers took him to police headquarters in order to question him about the business.

The Thompson Carbolic Soap Co. is the name of a new corporation which figures in the proposed settlement of the affairs of the Buchans Soap Corporation, 225 Fifth avenue. Creditors of the Buchans corporation met Monday and all except one agreed to accept a compromise of 20 cents on the dollar, to be payable 5 cents in cash and 15 cents in notes of the new company, such notes to mature within two years. If the settlement is made effective the assets of the old company will be sold by the trustee in bankruptcy to the new corporation. The old company's liabilities amount to $118,651.

The United Grocers' Food Products Co., Long Branch, N. J., was incorporated this week under the New Jersey laws, the name being similar to that of the company recently incorporated in New York. The authorized capital stock is $125,000 and the incorporators are W. A. Upham, 72d street and Riverside Drive, New York; C. Q. Dean, 1628 Amsterdam avenue, New York; E. D. Cronin, 889 Union street, Brooklyn. The company is to deal in groceries and other food products.

Grocers will take notice of the incorporation this week of the Long Island Potato Exchange, the organization of farmers who expect to bring about better results for the members in the sales of their potatoes. The authorized capital is $20,000 and the corporation is to carry on its business on a commission basis. The incorporators include Samuel Dickerson, Southold; C. H. Aldrich, Mattibuck; George H. Wells, Peconic. Whether or not the organization will put up the prices of potatoes to the grocers is to be seen. It is claimed that in the past the Long Island farmers have often been obliged to sell below the real market prices because no system was observed in the shipments to New York and Brooklyn and no effort was made to seek markets outside of this district.

Five indictments were returned last Friday against the American Ice Co. The indictments charge that the company acted in restraint of trade in buying the output of other supposed independent companies and in making various agreements with such companies. The cases are not to be tried until fall. The charges are echoes of happenings in the year of the so-called ice famine when the grocers as well as other people paid unusually high prices. Since then quite a number of grocers have been active in starting and pushing along the business of new ice companies.

Monday, June 29, 1908.

The attention of the country at large is just now being devoted to the serious increase in the prices of most cuts of fresh meat. It is true that meat continued to rise until it is now literally out of the reach of the poorer class of consumers. An advance of 5 cents per pound in the retail price of beefsteak is a typical instance.

The Fresh Meat Advance.

As usual, the retail meat dealer is bearing the brunt of the blame. Jobbers anxious to exculpate themselves blame the advance on the retailer and accuse him in the public press of extorting undue profits on a rising market. As a matter of fact, as every one in the trade knows, the retailer is not in the least to blame for the high prices of meat; in fact, it is not possible to fix the blame on any man or set of men. Sensational newspapers accuse a combination of the Western packers, but the packers are not fools. It seems quite obvious that they would not deliberately make a move—particularly at this time of little money and much fruit—which would inevitably reduce the consumption of their products and array the general public in a resentful horde against them. It is one of the very fundamentals of a large producing business that moderate prices within the reach of every one, and the large consumption which always results from that condition, constitute the ideal to be always striven for.

It is practically certain that the packers are no more responsible for the meat advance than the dealer. The cause seems unquestionably to be scarcity of good cattle at all shipping points.

The nomination of Congressman Sherman, of New York State, for Republican Vice-President recalls attention to his speech in the last Congress, purporting to give reasons why packers should not be compelled to stamp the weight of their goods on the packages. Mr. Sherman, incidentally, is a canned goods packer himself, and his views are therefore, in a sense, personal. Since the subject matter of his address is just as fresh to-day as when it was delivered, the weight question being still unsettled and mooted, a portion of it is reproduced:—

Sherman's Views on Short Weight.

> Now, the facts are that a very large majority of all the products of the canning companies of this country, whether they be inclosed in tin or in glass, are sold by the package and have been so sold for decades. The cans which have been presented by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Mann) do not bear upon their labels any statement as to their weight or quantity of the contents of the package, and it has not been the custom of the trade to so label packages, and if they have been sold by weight it has been by people, not those who manufacture the product, but by the retailer who perpetrated the fraud on the consumer.
> It is practicaly a ridiculous or impossible proposition to say that a man who puts up jelly by the jar shall label that jar, that glass, as to the amount, either in weight or quantity, that it contains. The buyer cares nothing about the weight; the housewife knows nothing about the weight; she has been accustomed to purchase jelly by the package, by the glass, and she never gives a thought to the question whether it weighs eight ounces, six ounces or twelve ounces.
> The package is before her and she sees what it is, and so purchases it for what it is. And the same is true of catsup; the same is true of corn, peas, beans and all such products. The fact is that the identical can filled with one commodity weighs from two or four ounces less or more than if filled with another commodity. The variation in weight is all the way from two to four ounces, depending upon the commodity inclosed in the can, when the cans are absolutely of the same size.
> It is also true that the commodity put up at one time in the year or in another, canned during an exceedingly dry or very wet season, will differ a trifle year by year. So that it is impossible in the conduct of the business to regulate the size of the can and use the same label in June or in August, or use the same label in 1904 and 1905 and have them in every case correctly state the quantity of the contents of the package.
> Neither the glass vessel nor the tin can is made with reference to containing a special amount in pounds or ounces. The sizes have become standardized in the trade without any reference to what they weigh, and they have been so dealt with in the trade for decades, and no purchasers from any canner ever suggests anything about the weight in the can. They are not known by weight and they never have been known by weight.
> The proposition in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and by the original provision of the bill is to compel the trade to do what it has never done—label the amount either in quarts or pints or pounds or ounces of the contents of the package. That would revolutionize trade conditions.

The "Grocery World," which favors the weight plan as a general proposition, is perfectly willing to admit that in some cases it would cause the manufacturer trouble, particularly as it would compel him to be much more careful than he is now to secure practical uniformity of weight throughout his packages. At present the weights of package goods vary very widely, one well-known brand of catsup, for instance, ranging from 13 to 15 ounces. But the inconvenience of the manufacturer is not a good argument against a general benefit.

The "Grocery World" also believes that Congressman Sherman makes a wholly groundless insinuation when he suggests that the short weight frauds of the past have been perpetrated by retailers and not by manufacturers; also that he goes much too far when he declares that consumers care nothing about the weight of the package goods they buy. As to this proposition he will probably not find a single retail grocer to agree with him.

The "Grocery World" has secured a copy of the circular issued by the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. explaining its position upon the selling of large retail buyers. From it the following extract is taken:—

More About the Kellogg Argument.

> Many large retail buyers are of the opinion that we should make quantity price and that quantity should govern in such matters. We have no doubt this is so on some commodities, but it would be ruinous to let quantity govern toasted corn flakes. Thousands of retail grocers would buy the quantity (in excess of their needs) to get the inside price, and when it got old we would be buying it back, not because we guarantee its sale, because we do not, but in self protection, for it would injure our trade to have stale goods go to the consumer.
> Therefore, quantity price being out of the question, we should in all fairness sell all retailers if we sell any. But that being equally out of the question, we have concluded that our own best interests and the best interests of the great army of retail distributers all over the country will be served by confining our sale to the wholesale grocer, thus putting every retailer on an equal footing.

This is an astoundingly weak confession of inability to run a business on a business-like basis. They cannot sell a buyer like the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, they say, because if they based their decision as to who should buy direct on the quantity bought, some retailers, to get the quantity price, would buy more than they needed, and the Kellogg concern, to prevent spoiled goods from getting out, would have to buy some of it back.

What utter childishness! Suppose the Kellogg concern said to a large retail buyer: "If you will buy 50 cases we will sell you direct, because we believe that every 50-case buyer is entitled to buy direct. But we warn you now not to buy 50 cases unless you can use them, for under no circumstances will we take a single package off your hands." How many retailers would overstock after hearing that? The trouble with the Kellogg people is that they are too weak to say that and stand by it. So in order to save themselves from the effects of their own weakness they rob large buyers of an undoubted right.

Even if this was a real argument, wouldn't it apply just as well to a jobber? Isn't the quantity price an incentive to anybody to overstock so he can get it?

Cooperative Buying in Germany.

Consul-General Richard Guenther reports from Frankfort that the Wholesale Purchasing Company for German Co-operative Associations, Ltd., at Hamburg, Germany, has published its report on the company's business during 1907. The total sales amounted to $14,254,000, an increase of 28.7 per cent. over the business of 1906. The capital of the concern (which only supplies its affiliated co-operative retail stores) is $239,000. The net profits from last year's dealings amounted to $120,000. The report states that the prospects for 1908 are not auspicious, because the present economic crisis will cause lack of employment for factory operatives and other working classes.

A few watermelons are coming from Georgia, but the most are from Florida. The range is 15 to 30 cents. The demand is good.

Grocery Protests Against Freight Advance

Canning Company Shows Up Inconsistencies in Present Schedule. Practically Whole Country Under One Classification. Canning Concern Argues for Uniformity.

The grocery and allied trades of the country are waking to the fact that the 10 per cent. advance in freight rates will make a considerable difference throughout the whole list. Accordingly, protests are going to the Interstate Commerce Commission from various affected interests nearly every day.

One of the strongest emanates from the New Blue Grass Canning Co., of Owensboro, Ky. It not only protests against the advance, but it uncovers some of the inconsistencies in the present freight rates. Freight rates almost everywhere exhibit about the same lack of system. A part of the above protest is as follows:—

I believe there should be a universal classification used by all railroads, steamboats and other transportation companies, making the same classification apply, no matter from whence the shipment originates nor to what point its destination is to be in our country.

Take, for instance, catsup—one of the articles the writer manufactures:

To points north of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi River we can ship catsup, canned vegetables and fruit at the same rate at the same classification. To points in the West we are not permitted to mix catsup and canned goods at all, except at an excessive rate to be paid on the canned goods if it goes with the catsup. To the South the same is true; the rules will not permit the mixing of catsup and canned goods, but will permit the mixing of catsup and condiments.

The ordinary catsup of commerce, such as is manufactured by all manufacturers, except those who manufacture very high-class goods, is less valuable per pound than the average value of canned fruits and vegetables. The catsup will weigh approximately the same number of pounds per cubic foot. While bottled catsup is shipped in glass packages, it is so securely packed that a claim for loss is the exception. As each grocer, both wholesale and retail, handles both the fruits and vegetables, as well as catsup, the rule should permit the shipping of these articles together.

Why ship mustard, pickles, chili sauce, pepper sauce and catsup, and not permit us to ship catsup, tomatoes and pumpkin.

You can see from all this that the rules governing these things are out of date; they are neither just nor fair to the consignee or the consignor. The rules are detrimental to the development of business, and actually reduce the amount of goods that could be transported by the railroad companies if they would permit the general mixing of goods of practically the same weight per cubic foot and practically the same value per 100 pounds, where the risk in transportation is not materially increased for the transportation company.

Something should be done, as stated in my former letter, to make a uniform classification and to permit as many goods of like kind and value to go under one classification as are ordinarily manufactured by one manufacturer, so as to facilitate the wide distribution and consequently the wide consumption of all commodities, more especially in the fruit and vegetable products.

For instance, rates from the Louisville and Nashville between Owensboro and Paducah, Ky., canned goods and vegetables, carload lots, 12 cents; less than carload lots, 25 cents.

Catsup in glass, carload lots, 13 cents; less than carload lots, 25 cents.

Catsup in wood, carload lots, 13 cents; less than carload lots, 19 cents.

A freight rate would be in carload lots either of the three items, 12 cents, and less than carload lots, either of the three items named, 18 cents. That would be a 50 per cent. raise for less than carload lots.

You will observe that catsup in wood is almost exactly 50 per cent. raise above the carload rate.

Next we will take the Louisville and Nashville to Humboldt, Tenn.:

Canned fruits and vegetables, carload lots, 31 cents; less than carload, 54 cents.

Catsup in glass, carload, 27 cents; less than carload, 64 cents.

Catsup in wood, carload, 27 cents; less than carload lots, 44 cents.

Can any railroad rate builder give a good and sufficient reason why the rates should be so varied passing over the same railroad lines, in the same direction?

Next, we come to a rate we had from the Illinois Central to Dyersburg, Tenn.:—

Canned fruits and vegetables, carload lots, 35 cents; less than carload lots, 66 cents.

Catsup in glass, carload, 31 cents; less than carload, 66 cents.

Catsup in wood, carload, 31 cents; cents; less than carload, 45 cents.

All these goods are manufactured from tomatoes, catsup being made from the offal of the canning house; at least 75 per cent. of it that goes to the South is made that way. The material is perfectly clean and wholesome, but would have to be thrown away unless made into catsup or tomato pulp. The rates should be as low on these articles as on canned goods. You will observe that in the instances cited above catsup in wood and in glass, carload lots, is less in two instances and more in one instance, while in less than carload lots the rate in wood is less in each instance. There is no objection to the rate in less than carload lots in wood.

However, the rate on less than carload lots in glass should be no higher than on canned goods, simply because the weight per cubic foot is about the same for catsup as canned goods, while the value is generally less per 100 pounds than canned goods.

The principal complaint is that the railroad company should permit an assortment of same character and class of goods as the above items to be shipped in the same car without discrimination.

We can and do ship catsup in glass and in wood together with canned goods to all points in the line territory at the same rate.

The thing that is needed most is one classification that applies to all points in the United States, one that will permit of as many items as is consistent, of a like nature, generally manufactured in one neighborhood, or one factory and generally handled by one jobber, to be put in one and the same car at the same rate.

In other words, canned fruits and vegetables, catsup, mustard, pickles should be permitted to go at the same rate. So should lard, meat and sausage be permitted to go at the same rate.

Since, under a combination of the railroads, practically the whole country is under the above classification, the arguments made above apply everywhere.

Bad Eggs Coming Into Washington.

Receivers Say Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina Shippers are Sending Bad Stock to National Capital.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 25, 1908.

Many commission merchants handling eggs here are up in arms against the shippers of Southwestern Virginia, portions of Tennessee and North Carolina, claiming that fully half of the shipments received in Washington from the sections mentioned are rotten and unfit for food.

According to reports it is often necessary for them to have their place deodorized after going through a shipment, and that frequently the bottom of the cases are filled with worms born in broken eggs.

"The Inquisitive Kids."

A most novel and effective window and showcase display is now being sent out to grocers by the Malta-Vita Pure Food Co., of Battle Creek. It's decidedly showy and a fine eye catcher.

It is a beautifully lithographed cut-out, in eight colors, bearing the caption, "Let Me See If It's the Same," which is portrayed by an inquisitive boy holding a regular package of Malta-Vita Corn Flakes, alongside of whom is a little girl whose curiosity is also aroused, and who is standing on her toe tips in an attempt to see the contents of the box.

A unique feature of the display is the fact that the paekage is not a part of the printed design, but is a standard stoek eartон, collapsible, thereby giving the appearance of aetually being held by the boy.

The size of the eard is 3 x 2 feet, and is just the kind of advertising that attraets the attention of women and children—the groeer's everyday eustomers.

The Malta-Vita Pure Food Co. will be glad to hear from dealers desiring this partieularly unique display, as they are sending them to handlers of their produet, eharges prepaid.

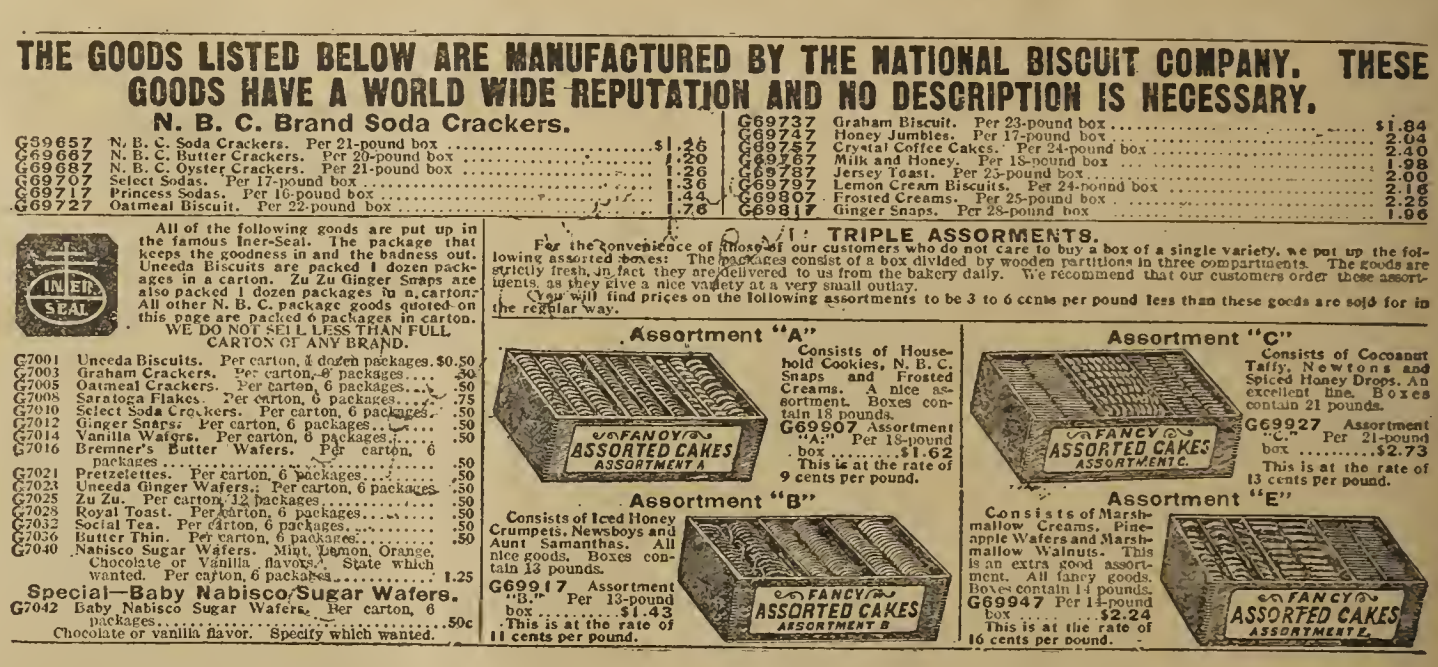
Retailers Protest Against Biscuit Trust

Pennsylvania Grocer Accuses National Biscuit Company of Injustice in Selling Mail Order Concerns Like Sears, Roebuck & Co. "Furnishing Retailers' Enemies with Powder." An Extract from the Sears, Roebuck Catalogue.

I have been reading a lot about the fight between the home merchants and the catalogue houses, but have never yet read anything concerning the following, which can be verified by anybody taking the trouble to ask Sears, Roebuck & Co. for their current grocery list.



About 95 per cent. of their offerings are under their private labels, the other 5 per cent. are goods carefully selected from well advertised lines and quoted at wholesale prices. This puts a fine veneering on the whole list, while it has just the opposite effect on the home merchant's stock, as our customers naturally compare familiar brands first.

This matter should be taken up with the manufacturers, as there is very little use of our fighting as long as they continue to furnish our enemies with powder. It does not seem reasonable either from their standpoint. Sears, Roebuck & Co. do not handle their full lines, just a few well selected, much advertised articles like Gold Dust, Royal Baking Powder, etc., and they are not going to push the sale of these either. The manufacturer is damaging his own business by prejudicing the public againt his own customers.

For example, we handle the National Biscuit Co's goods almost entirely, and I must say it is not pleasant to have this list circulating among our customers. I am inclosing clipping (kindly reproduce) from their list showing the National Biscuit Co's goods. This was taken from the centre of the page. The balance of the page, which is 8½ x 10½ inches, is taken up entirely with telling how good their own private brand of cakes and crackers are.

Note.—The National Biscuit Co. has always been a particularly grievous offender against the rights of retail grocers in this respect. It sells any department store which wants to buy its goods, and it cares nothing whatever how badly its prices are cut. The "Grocery World" has frequently pointed out the remedy; it still exists. The minute retailers as a body begin to enforce their resentment against a manufacturer by refusing to sell his products, that minute such manufacturer would begin to take notice of the retailers' desires and rights.—Ed.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change whatever for the week. New Ping Sueys have opened on a basis below last year, but still from 1 to 1½ cents above spot old teas. There is no change anywhere in the list of old teas. The market is not especially strong, but no radical change is expected before the end of the season. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee is very stupid. The valorization scheme hangs over the market like a menace and absolutely prevents the roasting trade from doing more than pursuing a hand-to-mouth policy. There is no indication of any change in the attitude of the trade, it being even more conservative than six months ago. The quality of the valorization coffee released by the Brazilian syndicate was not up to the expectations of the trade, and did not meet with as ready a sale as was expected. This coffee now comes directly into competition with the coffee of the Brazilian growers, now unsold at primal points, and one of the Brazilian papers, in a recent issue, admits that this will probably be the main source of irritation and friction when the new crop begins to be offered freely. Mild coffees are firm and unchanged. Java and Mocha steady.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market is weaker, sales having been made during the week at 1-16 off. Refined sugar is unchanged and shows no prospect of any change in the near future. The demand for refined sugar is very heavy and promises to be so during the entire summer, as all fruits seem to be in good supply. The sugar market was so dull during the spring months that there is still considerable low-priced sugar about, and the demand will not do all it should until this is worked off.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is dull and in light demand; price unchanged. Sugar syrup is selling excellently well at prices that show no change whatever. Molasses is unchanged and in very light demand.

Fish.

A falling off in the receipts of new shore mackerel has caused an advance of about 50 cents per barrel during the week. The demand is fair. Norway and Irish mackerel are unchanged in price and in light demand. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged in price and in extremely slow demand. Domestic sardines are unchanged and fairly active. French, Portuguese and Norwegian sardines are unchanged and in moderate demand only. Salmon is unchanged, no other grade having named future prices except Columbia River. The sales of the latter have been fair. Spot salmon is in fair request at unchanged prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged, both spot and futures, prices throughout being unchanged. The market is no more than steady, and even at full prices the packer is just about coming out whole. Corn is in fair request at unchanged prices. Peas are selling well at low prices. Peaches are unchanged and in slow demand. There will likely be a good pack. Apples are steady and in fair request. The dry weather in Maryland has interfered to some extent with the berry crop, and in some lines has made the pack shorter than it would have been. California canned goods are unchanged, sales of futures at the recently published prices having been fair.

Dried Fruits.

Owing to the great abundance of fresh fruit, the demand for prunes, unlike that of last June, is very dull. Prices are unchanged. Peaches are weak and in light demand, especially for futures. Apricots are inclined to be weak and the demand is moderate. Currants are selling in a small way. Prices on new currants have been made on a basis about ½ cent above spot goods. Prices on loose raisins have been named on a basis of 4, 4½ and 5 cents for 2, 3 and 4-crown respectively. This can hardly be compared with the price of spot raisins, because the market is so weak that there is no fixed price for them now. It can be said, however, to be a fair average price. The trade are not taking many future fancy seeded raisins at the recently named price of 6½ cents coast.

Beans and Peas.

The receipts of imported pea beans have been so heavy that the market has declined during the week. Domestic pea beans can now be bought in a large way at $2.60, which is a drop of 10 to 20, and the foreign are quoted at $2.12½. Marrows are down to $2.40. The demand for beans is good. California limas are quoted at 5⅝ to 5¾, which is about unchanged. Split and dried peas are unchanged and in fair demand.

Butter.

Solid packed butter has declined ½ cent during the week and prints 1 cent. The cause is excessive supply. The make is about normal and the quality is running fine, but the storehouses are full and the receipts must be marketed fresh. At the decline the market is firm and no change is looked for either in tub or print butter for the next few days. Under grades are selling well at 1 to 2 cents below the best.

Eggs.

The egg market is very firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen. The percentage of fancy eggs is growing less, owing to the hot weather and the fact that much of the receipts show the effects thereof. All eggs sell on arrival and the market is healthy. There is not likely to be any radical change in the next few days.

Cheese.

The cheese market is ¼ cent higher. The make is about normal and for the season the quality is fine. Under grades are very scarce and meet with ready sale at proportionate prices.

Provisions.

Everything in provisions is very firm. There has been a general advance in skinback hams of ¾ cent and regular and picnic hams of ½ cent. The consumptive demand is active for everything in the line of provisions, due partly to the high price of fresh meats, and at the advanced prices the market is firm. Bellies are also firm at ½ cent over a week ago. Pure lard has advanced ½ cent; compound unchanged. Dried beef and barrel pork are both firm and unchanged. Canned meats are fairly active at ruling prices.

Produce.

Eastern Shore onions, $1.15 to $1.25 per hamper; Bermudas, $1.25 per crate; Texas, $1.25 per crate; Egyptian, $2 to $2.25 per 2-bushel bag, demand fair to good; red radishes, $2 per 100; white, $1 to $1.25 per 100, demand fair; scullions, 75 cents to $1 per 100, demand fair; carrots, $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel, 2½ cents per bunch, demand fair; beets, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand fair; spinach, $1 to $1.25 per barrel, demand good; rhubarb, $1.50 to $2 per 100, demand fair; peas, 50 to 80 cents per basket, demand good; salad, 50 to 75 cents per barrel, demand fair; cabbage, 60 to 75 cents per barrel, demand fair; cauliflower, No. 1, 10 to 12 cents per head; No. 2, 2 to 3 cents per head, demand good; squash, 40 to 50 cents per basket, demand fair; turnips, 40 to 50 cents per basket, demand fair; string beans, green, 50 cents per basket; wax, 35 to 40 cents per basket, demand fair.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.50 to $2 per bunch; 8-hands, $1.15 to $1.40 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 cents to $1 per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch; red, $1.50 to $3 per head, demand poor; grapefruit, $4 to $6 per box, demand poor; limes, 80 cents to $1 per 100, demand good; California oranges, $2.75 to $4.25 per box, demand fair to good; lemons, $2.50 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good; pineapples, $2 to $3.25 per box, demand good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

With the opening of the tomato canning season for 1908 only six weeks off, the market prices of the 1907 pack are stiffening up all along the line, which fact suggests a number of questions of interest to canners and jobbers, and to the compilers of the statistics concerning that article as well, such as, for instance, what has become of the record-breaking output of last year, and if that great pack has been nearly consumed, or has gone into the usual channels for consumption, along with the carry-over from the year previous, what will happen as to prices should the output in the coming season fall back to normal for an average season? The total output in 1907 was around 13,000,000 cases, while the average pack during the previous five years was between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000 cases. These figures are impressive. During this week the market con-

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

tinued active, and the outlook is for further activity in the coming week for both spot and future deliveries.

The pea packing season is over, as far as this section is concerned, and the output is around 50 per cent. of an ordinary pack. The demand has been chiefly for the second and standard grades, though a fair proportion of the higher grades has been sold. Unless the other canning sections will have a large surplus above their present contracts when their season is over, the pea market will be in good shape for the fall and winter trade. The spring crop and the pack of string beans is up to the average, both in size and quality, and the demand for them is satisfactory. Spot corn is firmer, because of the unfavorable reports concerning the coming crop, and there is also a stronger market for future corn. In the other lines of vegetables the demand has been small comparatively.

The pack of strawberries and gooseberries is smaller than was expected, and there is talk of a disappointment in the crop of raspberries, which is now coming in. Blackberries and blueberries come next, but no reliable information about them is at hand as yet. Pineapples are fine quality this season and the demand is fair. This is a cherry year in this section, and the quality is above the average. The outlook for the peach crop is excellent, and the demand for them for future delivery is increasing, especially for pie peaches and for seconds in water and syrup.

Spot stocks of tomatoes and corn are exceedingly light, orders aggregating quite a volume have depleted packers' warehouse stocks; as a result, lots on hand above a carload or two are exceptional and carload and less than carload lots are being absorbed and cleaned up as rapidly as these offerings come to the surface. During the setting out season some packers were busy and could not give their attention to shipping goods. This gave an opportunity to those whose time was not so occupied to dispose of their holdings. Now that the "Setting Out" season is about over, the other class of packers are coming to the front and cleaning up the last car or two in order to have clean decks by packing season. The fact that goods still hold their own and the market is firm is evidence that there will be a general cleaning up.

Seconds standard tomatoes are difficult to locate; the majority of lots still unsold have suffered from exposure in the winter months and run irregular on account of freezing. It is also difficult to locate lots that show good color, as it will be remembered during the last packing season a number of tomatoes showed yellow around the core, and as packers strenuously avoided coloring, the rich, red, natural color is conspicuous by its absence. Fifty-two and a half to 55 cents can be nominally quoted as the market for full standard 2s tomatoes, with off standards at 47½ to 50 cents, depending upon quality and condition. Threes full standards are still obtainable in a small way on the basis of 75 to 77½ cents, depending upon brand and quality, but it would be difficult to locate a round lot, except at the latter figure, and, as before stated, very few round lots are obtainable at any price. A few sanitary tins and Jersey size, old style tins, are still being offered at prices exceptionally low, considering the figure demanded for futures of the same variety and size. Gallons continue dull on the basis of $2, sometimes f. o. b. and other times delivered, depending upon brand, quality and condition.

Beneficial rains, with temperature about normal, places futures in a somewhat easier position. The recent rain has been a source of satisfaction to growers and packers and has had the effect of alleviating serious doubts and fears of a drought at least so early in the game. While buyers' ideas seem to be on the basis of 75 cents, f. o. b. factory, from the volume of inquiries on this basis, it is easy to conclude that offerings under 77½ cents are not sufficient to satisfy the demand. Most conservative packers continue to hold to 77½ cents and manifest a willingness to await further conditions before accepting contracts which show a loss. Just what developments may follow between now and the first of September it is of course impossible for any one to forecast. At the same time it is natural on the part of the seller to refrain from taking on much business at least until the goods are in the can. Some packers have advanced their price on 2s new packed tomatoes to 60 cents, f. o. b. factory, while others are willing to take business on the basis of 57½ cents.

Early June peas do not seem to strengthen, even in the face of facts and conditions assuring a short pack; just why the buyers have not absorbed what looks to be an attractive proposition is a question. At the same time this attitude is liable to change at any moment, and as prices are now extremely low, there is a possibility of another story at almost any moment.

Improved demand of spot corn at advanced prices is notable. The uncertain outlook, as far as new packed corn is concerned, continues to boost the packer in his opinion and suggest to him care and conservatism. During the past week bids declined have been promptly repeated, at 5 cents per dozen advance in order to secure, which would indicate that buyers are beginning to realize the packers' true position.

Future corn is a little firmer than a week ago, with little inclination among packers to take business of any volume and improved inquiry with prospective sales likely which, when finally consummated, will cause a still firmer attitude, at least for the shoepeg varieties. There has also been a fair volume of business for Southern packed Maine style at full prices, with possibility of continued buying.

Rice.

The poor assortment of select grades of rice now in the hands of jobbers and wholesalers throughout the country is due to the poor yield of the past two years. Last season the farmers were greatly hampered by incessant rains just at the harvest time, which caused the rice that had been cut, preparatory to threshing, to become stack-burned and otherwise damaged in color and style. The small crop, however, enabled the farmers to sell what they had saved at high enough prices to make up for the poor yield.

This spring weather conditions were ideal for early planting, and we learn from reliable sources that the acreage planted is about 25 per cent. in excess of last year, and with continued good weather from now until the growing crop is cut and stored the 1908 yield should be a good one.

This will not mean lower prices immediately, because the entire country is practically bare of supplies, and the enormous demand which will meet the crop when harvested will surely keep prices steady for a few months. Therefore any dealer is safe in carrying a liberal stock of choice goods, if he can secure same, until at least November. After that the more desirable new fancy heads will be more plentiful and selections far superior to spot stocks.

In the meantime the consumption of rice must surely go on, and it is really a question whether the remaining supplies will be sufficient to supply the demand. This naturally means higher prices, particularly for domestic Japans, which have been neglected this season until now, when the medium grades of Honduras are about cleaned out.

Java, Bassein, Patna and other imported grades can only fill this gap with certain trade, as the majority of grocers seem prejudiced against foreign rice in general. Domestic Japans produced throughout Louisiana and Texas give far better results, and when properly cooked show up nearly as good as fancy Carolina grades.

Spices.

Prices for general spice line are unquestionably firmer. The supplies in the hands of the dealers of all classes are low on account of the general curtailment of purchases, and they must soon be buyers.

Pepper.—Singapore pepper is slightly easier for import, though the spot market is lower than import on account of the large amounts on the way.

It is probable that prices for pepper will not advance greater. Imports for the first five months of 1908 are 50 per cent. over imports of the same period of 1906. The inference is plain that crops are larger and prices cannot react against this flood. However, we believe that pepper is likely to show firmer figures probably all of this year to the extent of 1 cent per pound.

Cayennes are very firm and have advanced for Zanzibar and prime Mombassas. The output is going to be very small on account of drought and the curtailment of acreage cultivated by the German colonists, and also in Zanzibar.

Cloves.—As usual, no one under the sun can predict as a certainty anything about cloves.

Prime Zanzibar.—Spot will be a little cheaper a month or two hence than now.

Pimento is low and all information points to an advance.

Nutmegs are still low, but the buyer who does not stock now will pay for his waiting, we believe.

Gingers are at least ¼ cent firmer and will show an advance of ½ cent to 1 cent within a month.

Seeds.—Poppy seed is slightly easier for import, though Caraway does not show any decline; indeed is firmer.

Sugar.

There has been a fair business in raw sugar this week. Prices are lower.

The market isn't ready yet to go ahead. The underlying conditions are all right, there has been a good basis for the level that has been built, but to make the top hard and capable of resisting the little waves of pessimism that come along good business is needed. Prices are waiting for the demand to catch up. After a period of over-supply it is always a hard task to get things back into a settled state, and in this instance it is taking quite some time. There is no doubt that the improvement is progressing and that the old stocks are going into consumption at a more rapid pace each week. The demand at the refinery ports has been better, but we need a bigger demand to support the market. A big demand at this time of the year is expected. The summer season is counted upon to bring up the consumption. Prices are not depending now upon the fact that production this year has been curtailed. The governing influence at present is the adjustment of consumption to the production and what is to be the extent of the reduction in the supply. A consumption equal to that of last year will bring supplies down and higher prices would be warranted. But we must wait and see. The market needs assurance, through an increase in the present demand, that the consumption is to equal that of last year; that the big fruit crops will counterbalance the general business depression; it needs assurance that the European markets won't give way under the influence of favorable beet growing weather or the fear of the 300,000 tons of Russian exports after September 1st to the United Kingdom. It is a two-sided market. What has happened so far has raised the price level. The quotation got up to 4.50 cents. It is down to 4.31 cents today, having been see-sawing in the interval, waiting to see how conditions were to develop, waiting for an increased demand to provide new confidence. The higher prices go the more confidence is needed. The decline in our quotation did not come because of a lack of faith in the situation here. We were getting along all right, had buyers for the raws coming in, and made an advance of four points last week. Europe cabled lower prices, her traders were showing themselves unable to maintain values, and the effect here was immediate. We followed her in the decline. Sugars unsold destined to this port couldn't find buyers at the previous price and concessions were necessary.

Refined Sugar.—All refiners hold prices firm, f. o. b. respective shipping points, net basis of granulated 5.30 cents, less 1 per cent. cash. The Federal and Warner alone will sell to jobbers and manufacturers privilege of four weeks' delayed shipment; the American Sugar Refining Co., Howell, and Arbuckle, to only manufacturers 30 days' delay, to jobbers shipment to be made within 7 days from date of purchase, requiring that "assortment and shipping instructions must be mailed on day order is placed and confirmed."

MARKET NOTES.

The first New Jersey tomatoes are in, ranging from $1.50 to $2 per basket. The quality was fair for early fruit. Mississippi tomatoes still average 60 cents, and plenty are coming. Floridas are about done.

Strawberries are nearly done. New York is now shipping some very fine fruit, ranging in price from 15 to 20 cents. The demand is good.

Cantaloupes have slumped. Californias, which averaged $4 per crate, have dropped to $2, on account of the low price of peaches. Southern cantaloupes range from $1 per basket up.

New crop white potatoes are in from New Jersey and average 80 cents per basket. Last year the range was from 45 to 50 cents, because Southern potatoes, with which they must compete, was $1 lower than it is this year. The present price of Southern white potatoes is $3.50 to $4, and the New Jersey shippers are taking advantage of that fact.

Lima beans are still practically out of the market.

New Jersey is beginning to ship corn, the first few baskets bringing $2 per basket. Southern corn ranges from $1 to $1.50 for about 100 ears, and is in slow demand.

Pie cherries are winding up. The supply has been very heavy. Present prices 4 to 6 cents per pound; demand good.

Gooseberries average 6 cents per quart and are in slow demand.

Currants are coming from New Jersey and New York and range from 8 to 11 cents per quart. The demand is good.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. Breckenridge.

Washing Powders.

These comprise cleansing crystals, dry soaps, extracts of soap, and soap powders. They are generally made up of 90 parts of soda crystals ground to powder, and then mixed with a small percentage of soap, and about two parts of either starch powder or borax.

The best of them have soda ash as their chief basis. Sometimes it is reduced to a coarse powder and stirred up with liquid size or a decoction of linseed, Irish moss or British Gum, after which the compound is dried and finally recrushed and powdered.

Washing Soda or Soda Crystals.

This is a combination of sodium, oxygen and carbon, made by dissolving soda ash in water, and afterwards evaporating and crystallizing it in large iron pans.

Zante Currants.

The dried fruit, sometimes called Corinthian raisins, produced from small grapes of the variety Corinthiaca, about the size of peas, and which grow in clusters about three inches long.

Large quantities of this description are cultivated in Morea, Corfu, and other islands of Greece, as well as in Zante.

In the latter the fruit is grown on an immense plain, under the shelter of the mountains on the shore side of the island, where the sun has great power and quickly brings them to maturity.

When gathered and dried by the sun and air, on mats, the currants are conveyed to magazines, heaped together, and left to cake until ready for shipment. They are then dug out with iron crowbars, trodden into casks, and exported.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Lancaster, Pa., June 3, 1908.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find two copies of circulars for your criticism in your valuable paper.

I am only an amateur at writing ads., as I have only had experience in writing my own ads. for about five months.

Please accept my thanks for any criticism you may make.

Yours truly,
A. H. MOSEMANN.

Two circulars were inclosed herewith, both measuring 12 x 8½ inches, and being printed the long way. The paper used is rather poor, although the printing is clearer and better than is usually done on paper of this grade. I should pay a few cents more a thousand and get better paper. It seems to me as if these circulars were rather awkward in shape. There may have been some reason why they were printed the long way instead of the short way, but unless it was a good reason I shouldn't do it. The sheet is plenty wide enough to divide into good columns.

I reproduce both the circulars sent, in reduced photographic form:

Here is another good brother who persists in putting his name at the top. I wouldn't do it. The proper place is at the bottom, and that's where it should go.

Take up the circular headed "Specials for This Week." I consider it pretty good advertising. Evidently carefully prepared by some one who takes an interest and knows what he is doing. The only criticism I would make of this circular is that the acrostic in the middle column is a little crude and far-fetched. A few strong, terse sentences in larger type than the rest of the circular would have produced a much better result.

The other circular, headed "Fresh Butter, etc.," is not materially different from the other except that boldface type is used for the subheadings instead of plain capitals. I think some boldface might be an improvement, though not this boldface. I imagine the cut in this circular represents a ham cutter, but I don't consider it any advantage to the circular, since it requires an effort of the imagination to give it a point. If something had been said like "This is a picture of the machine that shaves the cleanest, thinnest slices of ham you ever saw," then the cut would have had a point.

Another good reason why I reproduce these circulars is that they are printed in two colors, which is unusual in circulars of this kind. The use of the second color is not very effective, however, as it is not used to emphasize the important parts of the circular, but is used indiscriminately. The second color is a dull red, which is not very pleasing.

Here is another circular which I have had for some time, but which I have not had room to reproduce before. It is a good example of the use of a cut to illustrate a point. The cut is from a photograph of a meat market, and shows a number of sides of beef hanging in the window. The text is as follows:

Meat Clubs the Result of High Meat Prices.

As a result of the extremely high meat prices in the West, throughout Missouri meat clubs are being formed in various localities for furnishing of farmers with fresh meat. In some sections they are having a notable effect in competition with the ordinary meat markets. On Friday morning shareholder A, for instance, takes a choice heifer weighing 700 to 800 pounds to the slaughter house. Without feed or water she stays in the inclosure provided for the purpose until night, at which time the butcher kills her, quarters the carcass and hangs it in the shed to cool. Early Saturday morning he returns and cuts each quarter into six as near equal parts as possible, hanging them on twelve numbered hooks, always hanging the same cut on the same hook. This makes on the first six hooks, for example, six equal cuts from the right hind quarter. On hooks 7 to 12 there are hung similar cuts from the left fore and hind quarters. Thus on hooks 1 to 7 there are similar cuts, also on 2 to 8, 3 to 9, and so on. Saturday forenoon the shareholders go to the slaughter house and get their meat. If one share is held by one or more persons, the one who arrived first cuts the share hanging on his hook into the right dimensions, leaving all save his portion for those with whom he divides. In order that each shareholder may have a turn at all the different cuts, a table is prepared which shows each member the hook from which he is to take meat each week. The shareholders take turns in furnishing the animals, which are weighed before being killed, and each member is credited with the proper number of pounds of live weight. At the end of the season the accounts are balanced and those furnishing the heaviest animals receive the money that the ones who furnished the light weights had to pay. At the beginning of each season the shareholders agree upon a certain price per pound as a basis of settlement at the end of the season. From these figures we see that during the season, covering about four months, there will have been furnished eight heifers and twenty-four lambs. At average prices the heifers would be worth from $24 to $28 each, and the lambs $3.50 to $4.25. A $24 heifer will furnish marketable meat that would cost about $40 at retail prices, and a $3.50 lamb on foot would sell for about $5 from the block.

More Butter But Higher Prices.

In Spite of Very Large Production, Heavy Demand for Storage Holds Prices Up. Storehouses Now Full and Decline is Expected.

The butter market at the present time presents the unusual condition that while this year's make has been much larger than last year, prices are not lower but higher. Unusually favorable weather is responsible for the heavy production.

The reason for the stiffness in prices is the large speculative demand for butter to store. Last year at this time the market for storage averaged 25 cents per pound; this year it ranges from 25½ to 26. As a result of the heavy storage demand the warehouses are full and practically no more can be stored.

This probably means a decline in price within the next few weeks. For one thing, the hot weather is interfering with the quality, and that of itself would naturally reduce the price. Then the fact that no more butter can go into storehouses, but all must be thrown on the market, means a decline on that ground also. A drop of 2 cents would not be unjustified.

Question: * * *, Milroy, Pa.—What are the State laws in regard to the retailing of firecrackers and fireworks? Our town is not a borough and we have nothing to go by but the State laws, of which we are totally ignorant.

Answer.—The act of June 10, 1881, P. L. 111, provides that any person who shall knowingly or wilfully sell or cause to be sold to any person under 16 any cannon, revolver, pistol or such other deadly weapon, or any imitation or toy cannon, revolver or pistol which can be loaded with gunpowder or other explosive substance, cartridges, shot, slugs or balls, or who shall sell any such minor cartridges, gunpowder or other dangerous or explosive substances, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not exceeding $300.

The latest act on the subject is the act of March 24, 1905, P. L. 49, which forbids the sale or use of any fireworks or firecrackers containing picric acid or picrates, all explosive canes using chlorate of potash, or other high explosive ammunition, all explosive canes using blank cartridges, all blank cartridge pistols, all pellets or tablets composed of chlorate of potash or other high explosive compounds. The penalty is fine from $50 to $500 and imprisonment of 30 days to 6 months.

There is hardly a statute on the books more completely ignored than the laws governing the sale of fireworks and firecrackers. Only when some accident happens is the matter looked up and the dealer held liable. Nevertheless, all these laws are live and can be enforced the very minute the authorities wish to do it.

Question: * * *, Philadelphia, Pa.—Will you kindly give your opinion and advice in the "Grocery World" on the following: About a year ago I had a leaky roof. I called in a man, showed him the leak and asked him if he could fix it and what it would cost. He said to repair it would cost as much as a new roof and a new roof would cost $22.50, with a 10-year guarantee. I told him to go ahead and do it. It is a small gravel and pitch roof about 14 x 15 feet. After the first light rain he presented his bill. I protested that the rain was not enough to show that the roof was satisfactory. However, I paid him $20 on account, and when we had a heavy rain the roof leaked again. I sent for him and he came, patched up a little and suggested lining the window sills with tin at an additional cost of $3.50. I told him to do it, and after he was done he asked for the balance of his money. which I paid after he wrote his guarantee under the bill, which was this: "Above slag roof warranted for ten years." The roof is now leaking as before and no coaxing or threatening will bring him to even look at it, he claiming his work was all right and the leak was caused by the water coming in somewhere else. What can I do? Have no redress without legal proceedings against him, which would be too expensive. Can I not get a warrant for his arrest on the charge of misrepresentation, and if so, how shall I go about it and what will such proceedings cost and how will it end?

Answer.—I should get after this fellow, for he is a type of the tradesman who cares nothing about his warranties after he has the customer's money. You cannot arrest him, for he has committed no criminal wrong. The proper course to pursue is to give him written notice that the roof is defective, that you expect him to repair it under his guarantee by a certain time, and that if he fails to do it by that time you will have it done by somebody else and sue him for the cost. This you have a legal right to do and you can recover, if the facts are as you state.

Such an action would not be expensive. It would be brought before a magistrate, or justice of the peace, and if the defendant is near at hand the initial costs would not exceed $2.50. Furthermore, if the sum you sued for was less than $5.33, he could not appeal, and you could issue execution against him at once. The costs you would of course get back if the defendant has assets.

How to Sell Rice.

Grocers generally are beginning to realize that the proper way to handle rice is in the convenient little cotton pocket, weighing from one to ten pounds each. B. Fischer & Co., of New York, have taken the lead with this style package, and are now the largest distributers of rice packed this way in the United States. Their packing plant has been gradually increased in their new quarters, so that now their output aggregates about 40,000 bags daily. This does not clude the private brands which they ack for dealers and jobbers all over he East. Orders for car lots are not nusual, and with their facilities are andled very rapidly.

Their success with the bag rice propotion is undoubtedly due to the general atisfaction their four standard brands ive. The cost of packing has been reuced to a minimum, making it possible o offer the trade their package goods t but a slight advance above the same rades in bulk.

The loss of time, weight, inconvenience nd assured accuracy always are a few f the points which have won the groer. Then, too, a good many dealers ke the idea of having rice packed this ay under their own brand, thus reeiving the benefit of good advertising.

Fischer's have direct connection with everal of the largest mills throughout he best producing sections of the South, nd also control several well-known rands of the famous Georgetown geine South Carolina rice, and expect luring the coming season to sell more ancy head rice than in any previous year, claiming that new connections with actual producers will enable them to sell the trade as cheap as the wholesale grocers can purchase themselves.

This firm deals only in coffee, tea, spices and rice, and each article is handled by different departments, who devote their entire time to the proper purchasing and marketing of each individual line. In this way far better results are obtained, and by devoting their entire energy to these four lines, they reduce the cost of importing, manufacturing and handling such goods to a minimum.

Their new plant at Franklin and Greenwich streets is now entirely completed, and they wish to extend a cordial welcome through the "Grocery World" to any one visiting New York.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

MEAT UNDER GLASS.

We don't make enough of our refrigerator plant. Here our entire line of fresh meats is under glass in a thoroughly cold air show case. Compare this with the ordinary butcher's stand. Exposed to flies by the thousands. Exposed to dirty fingers and dust.

Talk about the hygienically equipped department and put emphasis upon the elimination of the fly nuisance. It's a great card.

HANDLING FRUIT ORDERS.

We had a few complaints last week about the poor condition in which some of the fruit orders were delivered. This must be stopped. We have purchased special boxes that hold, one, two, three and four boxes of berries, currants, apricots, peaches, etc. These must be used in every case where fruit is to be delivered or even taken by the customer on the train. It is, of course, an increased expense, but will prove an advertisement in the end.

WAGON REFRIGERATOR.

Every wagon now carries a small ice box for the purpose of carrying all loose lard orders, also butter. These goods are passed from our cooler to these boxes, and no matter how long the trip may be the goods are delivered in perfect order. Make a strong point of this also. It will bring you many a butter order on hot days that particular people would send to the corner grocery for.

PICNIC TIMES

are here. We have figured out a box containing ten different things—enough for two people. Price, 85 cents. It's called "Picnic Box for Two." The articles you will find all typewritten. Half a dozen will be packed ready every morning and placed in the cooler. As soon as a party mentions "Picnic," or as soon as you discover that your customer is bound for an outing or is going on the train produce this box. It will be advertised all next week.

DON'T REBEL

inwardly when given orders to carry out. Simply carry them out or give up the job. If you are out of sympathy with our methods or our daily instructions, you are an obstruction to the firm and particularly to yourself. Give us your entire support and we'll give you ours. That's the way for both of us to succeed.

PICNIC NECESSITIES FOR JULY 4TH

Here are some "Picnic Necessities" without which your stock for this National Holiday will not be Complete.

Meat Loaf

Composed entirely of fine selected meats—contains no flour or cereals. Baked in loaves of about eight pounds. Delicious, sliced thin.

Lunch Roll (Copyrighted.)

Choice, tender pieces of pork, very mildly cured; stuffed in linen sack or container. Boiled and ready to use in place of boiled ham.

Cervelat (also known as Summer Sausage or Winter Bologna.)

Not to be confounded with Lebanon Bologna or similar cheap products. Very choice and different from the numerous brands on the market from the fact that it contains no cereals. In beef casings—also a limited supply in hog casings. Indispensable for lunches.

Boiled Hams

For family picnics we recommend "Our Own." Eight to twelve pounds average, boiled without removing the bone. Guaranteed mild, sweet, tender and juicy.
Also have the boneless variety, for storekeepers obliged to slice boiled ham.

Boiled Tongues

Fine, large steer tongues, but more expensive than formerly, because of the extreme scarcity and prevailing high price of cattle.

Salesmen as Backbiters.

I've made up my mind that salesmen are the biggest backbiters in the world.

Oh, I know—I'm one of 'em, and I don't claim to be any better than the rest.

We do it unconsciously a good deal of the time. We do it to hold trade and we feel as if it was fair to do anything to keep a competitor from getting what we believe belongs to us.

So to do that we unconsciously accuse our competitors of about everything except murder and adultery.

I was sitting the other day—last Tuesday, I think—in the store of a grocer up the State. He had asked me to wait until he got rid of his wholesale grocery salesman, whose regular day was Tuesday.

So I waited, and while I sat there I couldn't help hearing the conversation.

The grocer wanted a few prunes.

"Want large prunes?" asked the salesman.

"Yes," was the reply, "I want 40s. What's your price?"

"Seven and a half cents," said the salesman.

"Oh, come," said the grocer, "I'm offered 40s for seven cents."

"Want to tell me who by?" asked the salesman.

"No," said the grocer, "I don't, but it's an all right house."

"Well, I can't do it," was the answer, "and I'll bet a dollar they ain't 40s. I can sell you 50s for seven cents, too."

"No," said the grocer, "they're 40s. That's what I said I wanted, and what they quoted me."

"I'll bet they ain't," persisted the salesman. "They couldn't sell 40s at that price."

In the end he got the order, but d'ye see what he had to do to do it? He deliberately accused some competitor whose name he didn't even know of attempting to work a plain fake. I should call that a charge of obtaining money on false statements. As a matter of fact, I don't see why such a thing wouldn't be plain stealing.

All those things that salesman accused his competitor of. And the funny part is that he probably didn't have the slightest idea he was doing it.

I think it was on the same day—not later than the next, anyway—that I heard a salesman for a spice house make a crack about the goods of a competitor not being pure.

"Your prices are pretty high," said the grocer he was trying to sell, "So and so are way under you."

"Our goods are pure," said the salesman, with a wink that he intended to make significant.

"Well, ain't theirs?" asked the grocer.

"I ain't saying anything," answered the salesman, "but our goods are guaranteed under the food law. We can sell you compound goods cheaper, too, but we don't sell 'em as pure."

That was about as straight a charge as he could make, that the other house was selling adulterated goods as pure.

Of course he had a right to say so if it was true. He'd have been a lunkhead if he hadn't said so.

But in this case it wasn't true. I know the house he accused and it's all right. It's not a bit more likely to give the trade a crooked deal than this salesman's house.

This salesman may have understood the real meaning of what he said, but I doubt it. He was simply up against a condition and he had to meet it. The purity bluff was the quickest way out.

Occasionally you'll run across a salesman who has the nerve to say when something like this it put up to him by a fellow he's trying to sell:—

"I don't know anything about that, and I don't intend to say anything about my competitors. I want to sell my own goods."

Still less often will you get a salesman who will own up that his competitor's goods are as good as his. I don't know as I'd expect him to go quite that far—that's a little too much.

I've known a whole lot of salesmen, though, that would do the worst of all.

They'd say, "Of course I'm not going to say anything against my competitors, but——"

And then they'd hand out the hottest roast they could cook up.

That seems to me like a little worse than a rotten deal.

But as I say, we do it unconsciously. We really don't mean it. I'm not excusing it, mind. It's not the right thing. I suppose it's a kind of left-handed self-preservation. We're after an order. We see it slipping away on account of the buyer's idea that he can do better somewhere else. We go after it hard and our competitor's reputation gets stepped on.

Of course we oughn't to have stepped on it, but it oughn't to have been in the way. Nobody ought to have the nerve to compete with us.

AFTER TWO YEARS' USE JOHNSON'S "EVERSHARP" KEEPS SHARP AND SLICES VERY THIN AND SMOOTH. The best machine he ever used, advertises the store and brings in new trade.

KEYPORT, N. J., May 25, 1908.

MR. A. W. JOHNSON,
New Brunswick, N. J.:

DEAR SIR:

I have been using your "Eversharp" Dried Beef Slicing Machine for nearly two years, and I would not know what to do without it. It is the best slicing machine I have ever used.

My sale on sliced beef has increased very much since I began using the slicer.

I believe the machine is an advertisement for the store, as the beef sliced is very thin and smooth and cannot help but bring in new trade.

Yours respectfully,
PHELPS CHERRY,

An "EVERSHARP" Slicer costs $40. Order one. It will come right along; use it a month; if it don't make good send it back to the manfacturer, A. W. JOHNSON, NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Fourth of July Windows.

No. 1.

This is a centre piece for a Fourth of July window.

Make a large hoop out of a bendable strip. The laurel leaves are cut out of stiff paper and tinted with water color. The leaves point upward and overlap so that the fastenings are concealed. At the top place a large bow of red, white and blue ribbon.

In the centre of the wreath suspend the "Liberty Bell" by the ribbon. Bells made of wire and covered with tissue paper can be bought or you can make one out of different size hoops and cover, or it can be made flat out of boards and then covered.

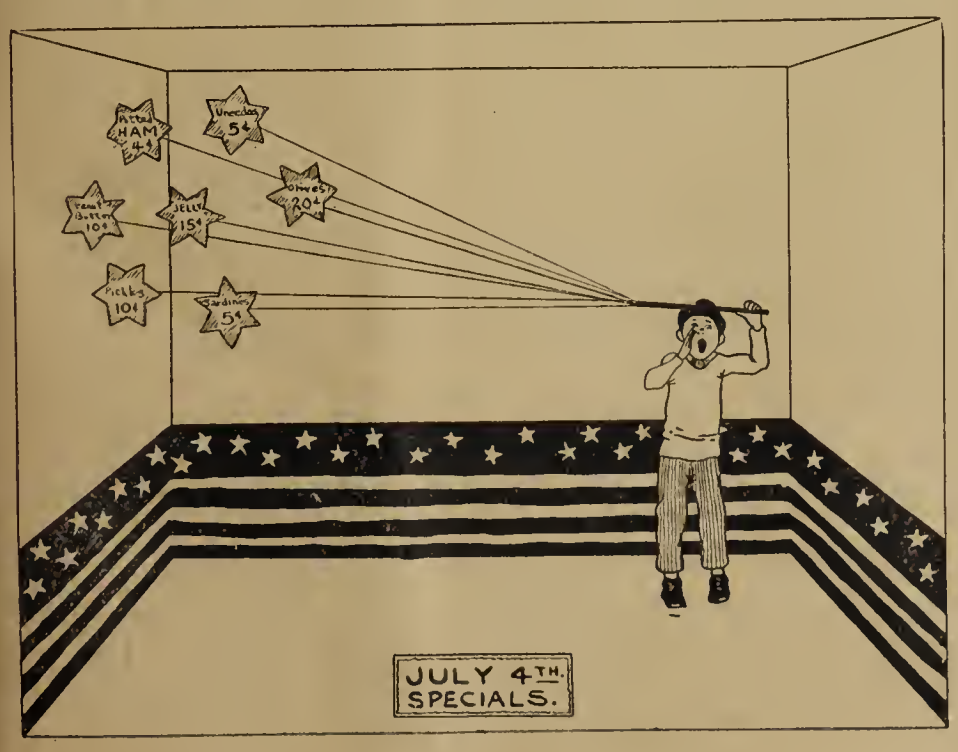
No. 2.

For this window you will need a small figure of a boy or brownie or a large doll. In my own window I used a paper mache brownie.



The figure is placed back in a corner of the window. The stars are cut out of different colors of paper and pasted on the window glass. Colored twine or baby ribbon is glued to the backs of the stars and run to the "roman candle" in the boy's hand.

For the sides and back of the window use a roll of Dennison's crepe tissue paper. Display your goods in small bunches on the floor. Use price cards with a small firecracker glued to one corner.

Open a couple of packs of firecrackers and place at the boy's feet, also scatter a few over the floor.

Wrapping Paper Trust Smashed.

Sentence of a fine of $1,000 each was imposed by the United States Circuit Court in New York last Monday upon 23 companies manufacturing wrapping paper for violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by forming an illegal combination in restraint of trade. The companies composed almost the entire membership of the Fibre and Manila Association, which was organized in 1906 by John H. Parks, who was secretary of it. The Federal Grand Jury began an investigation of the combine two months ago. To-day the jury returned indictments against 25 of the companies composing the association and against Parks, who is now in Europe. Solomon N. Stroock, counsel for the association, appeared in Court and pleaded guilty for the following companies:—

Analomink Paper Co., North Water Gap, Pa.; Bayless Pulp and Paper Co., Austin, Pa.; Bedford Pulp and Paper Co., Big Island, Va.; Brownville Paper Co., Brownville, N. Y.; the Champion Paper Co., Carthage, N. Y.; Central Paper Co., Muskegon, Mich.; Continental Paper Bag Co., Watertown, N. Y.; DeGrasse Paper Co., Pyrites, N. Y.; the Dexter Sulphite Pulp and Paper Co., Dexter, N. Y.; Detroit Sulphite Pulp and Paper Co., Detroit, Mich.; Fletcher Paper Co., Alpena, Mich.; Gould Paper Co., Lyons Falls, N. Y.; Hartje Paper Manufacturing Co., Steubenville, Ohio; the Island Paper Co., Carthage, N. Y.; the Island Paper Co., Menasha, Wis.; the Jefferson Paper Co., Black River, N. Y.; Newton Falls Paper Co., Newton Falls, N. Y.; Orono Pulp and Paper Co., Orono, Me.; the Parsons Pulp and Paper Co., Parsons, W. Va.; the Raquette River Paper Co., Potsdam, N. Y.; the York Haven Paper Co., York Haven, Pa.; Moyer & Pratt, Lyons Falls, N. Y., and Munising Paper Co., Ltd., Munising, Mich.

The wrapping paper manufacturers were forced two years ago to combine to prevent themselves from going into bankruptcy because of the methods of the agents of consumers, who, so as to cut prices, for a time favored one group of mills to the detriment of another. When the paper companies learned that the association they had formed came within the provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act it was dissolved, as it was not organized to violate the laws but to keep the mills, which were earning but 6 per cent., on a living basis.

Pennsylvania State Convention this Year in September.

Officers of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association Issue Call for New Castle. What Organized Pottsville Retailers have Accomplished.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., June 26, 1908.

The twelfth annual convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania will be held at New Castle, Pa., Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, September 1, 2 and 3, 1908. Official headquarters will be established at the St. Cloud Hotel. Convention sessions will be held in the County Court House.

Each affiliated association is entitled to two delegates to each one hundred or less members, and one additional delegate to each additional one hundred members or majority fraction thereof. Individual members in unorganized towns have the right to vote as one delegate. All affiliated associations are urged to be fully represented.

All eligible associations and all retail merchants are welcome and cordially invited to attend all sessions.

Hotel reservations may be made through E. O'Brien, secretary, New Castle, Pa.

Those who expect to attend are requested to communicate with the State Secretary at Erie, Pa.

New Castle offers those who will attend the convention choice of the following hotels: St. Cloud, rates, $2.50 per day or $2.75 with bath. The St. Cloud will be the official hotel. Fountain Inn, rates, $2.50; Hotel Henry, rates, $2 to $2.50, with bath; Excelsior, rates, $2; Sherman, rates, $1.50; New Leslie. European plan, rates, $1 per day up; Pierce House, rates, $2 per day. Convention sessions will be held in the County Court House.

The Pottsville Association has a delinquent list; has gained concessions and courtesies from railway companies that the merchants could never have attained as individuals. It has stopped loafing in front of show windows, successfully conducted an "Old Home Week," obtained concessions from the United Telephone Co. and wiped the trading stamp evil off the map of Pottsville. Charles P. Hoffman is the efficient president and T. E. Hummel the very capable secretary.

* * *

At the last meeting of the Merchants' Union Protective Association of Bradford, Wyoming, Susquehanna and Sullivan Counties three new members were enrolled and the following delegates to New Castle convention selected: C. H. Bosworth, Wyalusing, and E. P. Henwood, Skinner's Eddy.

A. M. HOWES,
State Secretary.

Grocery Conditions in Prohibition Territory

"Grocery World" Gets Opinions from Two Representative Grocers from Kansas City, Kansas, As to Effect of Liquor Elimination on Business. One Grocer Says Business Is Not Helped, the Other Thinks Strongly Otherwise.

In many of the discussions of the Local Option movement, Kansas City, Kan., figures as an ideal prohibition territory, all sales of liquor having been stopped there by enforcement of law. Opinions differ as to whether the elimination of liquor has or has not helped business, and in order to ascertain the "Grocery World" recently asked two representative grocers of Kansas City for their opinions. They widely differ, as may be seen by perusing them:—

No. 1.

Kansas City, Kan., June 17, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I beg to acknowledge your letter of June 2d, and will say in reply to your inquiries that the enforcement of prohibition in this city has not helped the business conditions here. Beer is juggled from door to door by the brewers, and by being so close to Missouri it is within reach of all. I do not want to see any more joints, but if we could get local option and high license and well regulated saloons it would be a great benefit to this city.

Respectfully,
OTTO ANDERSON.

Kansas City, Kan., June 8, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In reply to your letter of inquiry, I find business much more satisfactory since the joints have been closed than I ever did before.

We have a much more honorable class of people to deal with, and collections are better. Also I am sending you a circular under separate cover, which will give you a much better idea than I can give you.

Sufficient it is to say that all of our business men are more than satisfied with conditions, and that is what it takes to make up a good town.

Very respectfully,
B. F. HINTON.

Mr. Hinton sends a copy of an 8-page paper headed "Kansas City Under Law Enforcement," the whole tone of which is enthusiastic in its laudation of the alleged improved condition. According to this paper, prohibition has increased the population of Kansas City, increased the bank deposits, improved the city finances, decreased crime, reduced taxation, induced new building operations, increased and improved all business conditions. In short it has been the greatest boon any American community ever had.

Since the above was written, another Kansas City grocer has written on the business conditions existing there. His letter is as follows:—

Kansas City, Kan., June 23, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sirs:—I am the busiest man in the world is why I have delayed answering your letter of 2d, and now all I can say is to say what has already been said and that is to come yourselves and see. We have no saloons, we do not need any, and I believe our Kansas City banks, that is, Kansas City, Kansas, banks, are just as right and as safe and as full of money as any banks in our country, and I believe that Kansas City, Kan., pretty near leads the world in building, according to population. We have no boom on and yet we have jumped from 60,000 to 110,000. I cannot speak for my brothers in the grocery business, but for ourselves, our business is all right; our store closes at 7 P. M. and every man and lady go home every night with their pay in their pocket. We never open on the Sabbath; we do not handle tobacco of any kind. Tell them that Kansas City, Kan., is all right, is prosperous and ever shall be just as long as we keep the saloon out.

Yours truly,
HENRY RITTER.

High Prices for American Foods in Bohemia.

On Account of High Tariff, Such Products as Canned and Evaporated California Fruit, Salmon, Sell at Much Higher Prices than at Home. American Dealers have Some Chance, However, of Increasing Business.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 26, 1908.

The American Consul at Prague, Bohemia, reports that some of the American exporters of food products are going after the trade there. What they want is trade in canned and evaporated fruits, canned salmon, and biscuits of various sorts.

The Consul states that he replied to these exporters to the effect that an impression appears to prevail in Bohemia that perhaps our fruits are not carefully packed for foreign markets, and consequently do not arrive at their destination in a satisfactory condition. The overshadowing reason why our fruits do not find in Bohemia the market which they merit, however, must be attributed to another cause, namely, the high Austrian tariff rates.

A considerable percentage of the merchandise exported from Prague to the United States—which amounted to $3,214.850 in 1907—is on the free list. On the other hand, the following duties must be paid on some American food products entering Austria: Biscuits, $20.30 per 220 pounds, and when they contain sugar, $17.25. The duty on prunes, packed in boxes or sacks weighing over 66 pounds, is $2.84 per 220 pounds; in smaller packages, $5.08, or 2⅓ cents per pound. Ordinary California prunes sell for 20 cents per pound. Evaporated apricots, pears, peaches, apples and cherries pay a duty of $4.06 for 220 pounds. The duty on fruits sealed in tin or glass cans is $17.25 for 220 pounds, or about 8½ cents a pound Salmon in cans hermetically sealed pays a duty of $17.25 per 220 pounds, or about 8½ cents per pound.

Aside from the high duty, the Prague retailer takes a large percentage of profit, as compared with the American retailer, claiming that the expenses of the business demand the margin. Regardless of the high duties, the American exporter could increase his sales if he were to sell direct instead of through foreign houses, thus increasing commissions and freight. HOLT.

American Currant Importers Say Greek Combine is Oppressive

Thirty-eight of the Leading Houses of this Country Make Charges Before the State Department that Privileged Currant Company Arbitrarily Advances the Price and Sends Poor Goods to this Country.

The currant importers of the country have risen en masse against the Greek Currant Trust, and thirty-eight of them, including the leading firms, have filed a petition with the State Department at Washington complaining at the treatment they have received at the Trust's hands.

As readers of the "Grocery World" know, the Greek Government several months ago put its currant industry in the hands of a single concern called the "Privileged Currant Co." This concern was to take over the surplus crop in order to prevent price-cutting and generally look after the market with a view to getting as much money out of the industry as possible. The American importers say the actions of the combination have been arbitrary and unfair. The partial text of their petition is as follows:—

> The effect of the establishment of the Privileged Company has been most apparent in at times more than doubling the price of currants to the purchaser, without in any degree improving the quality for export.
> Upon arrival here the importer has little, if any, redress when, as frequently happens, inferior qualities (of currants) are received. Sales are made before arrival against these shipments, and the importer must take what is shipped and make deliveries. This, we would point out, is an aggravation of the wrong growing out of the fact that the United States is literally made a dumping ground for qualities of currants so low in grade that they are subject to refusal by the Privileged Company.
> We would respectfully urge that such means be taken as lay within the power of your Department to induce the Greek Government to compel observance of the prohibition (existing by law) against the export of inferior qualities of currants. That that Government has such power is shown by its relations with the Privileged Company. The Government is represented on the Board of Directors of the company, shares in its profits and exercises a close supervision over its affairs. We believe that suitable representations through the Minister of our Government would bring about the relief prayed for, namely, the absolute prohibition of export to this country of currants unfit for consumption.

There are no currants grown in this country, or in fact anywhere else than in Greece, and this country is therefore dependent on Greece for its supplies.

Pennsylvania News Items.

Bankruptcy proceedings have been instituted against the Consumers' and Producers' Equity Exchange, a Scranton (Pa.) co-operative buying concern established jointly by the Central Labor Union leaders and the farmers of the neighboring country districts to deal in milk, butter, etc. The company has been in existence less than two years and lost money from the start. The plan was to have the union men and farmers conduct the business for mutual interests.

Pottsville, Pa.

The Pottsville (Pa.) Retail Merchants' Association has issued the following open letter recounting the achievements of the organization:—

We started by regulating and insisting on certain concessions from the United Telephone Co. (when they started).

We wiped out the stamp evil—(and if we accomplished nothing else we've paid your dues for ten years in the saving).

We, by association with each other, did away with lots of petty jealousies, and proved to each other that the other fellow is not as bad as we thought he was. Come in and get acquainted.

We belong to the State Association—an active body of representative Pennsylvania business men—active for all that pertains to the good of the merchant, whether in municipal, State or National interests.

We offer you a rate of fire insurance at just one-half the regular rates—regularly chartered and under the Pennsylvania State laws.

We have collected for members in the last sixteen or eighteen months no less than $1,750 of bad accounts—accounts that were marked (practically) profit and loss. Have you such?

We furnish you with a list of buyers who fail to pay their bills—you cannot be "done" by the same people—your fellow merchant pays for your protection. Is it worth while?

We have gained concessions and courtesies from the railway companies that we never could have attained as individuals—you can help us get more.

We overcame, through council, the loafing in front of show windows and in front of places of business. Were you benefited?

We took an active part in keeping the boundary line of Schuylkill County from being disrupted by politicians.

We were active in organizing and bringing to a successful end "Old Home Week"—and Pottsville never did anything better for herself or her people.

New York State.

The retail meat dealers of New York State, in convention assembled last week, adopted the following resolutions:—

Whereas, The great scarcity of live cattle attributed to financial conditions depriving the greater portion of the people of a sufficient supply of meats; and

Whereas, Such scarcity has been the means of the enormous advance in prices of meats; and

Whereas, Such scarcity is reputed to be owing to the demands of meats being greater than the supply; and

Whereas, Our National Government exacts a tariff on live stock, shutting out our outside sources of supply; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the New York State Association of Retail Master Butchers of America, in convention assembled, expert in the knowledge of the conditions and the remedies to apply, demand in the name of the great American consuming public that the Federal Government take immediate steps to have the duty on all live stock removed; and it is further

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble be sent to the President of these United States and in addition that they be given the greatest publicity.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Sigmund M. Jacobson, who maintains a meat store at 250 North Ninth street under the name of the Penn Hotel Supply Co. was arrested by the Philadelphia Bureau of Health during the week and held in $400 bail for court on the charge of selling rotten meat. The inspector testified that the meat found in Jacobson's place was absolutely putrid. The fellow has been in the same kind of trouble before.

The Philadelphia Grocers' and Importers' Exchange took their annual excursion to Mt. Pocono on Thursday, returning Saturday evening. The party comprised about 200.

Morris A. Fryer, a salesman for William M. Montgomery & Co., wholesale grocers of Philadelphia, is reported to be in financial difficulties. He has disappeared and his accounts are said to be short about $1,500. There are rumors of other financial entanglements outside. Now that Fryer has gone, it is charged that he has been in the habit of giving rebates to his customers on limited price goods.

VALUE OF MAGAZINE Advertising

Magazine advertising makes people familiar with the name and quality of Swift's Premium Ham and persuades them to try it.
When they see a display, a show card or sign in your store the advertisement is recalled. The result is a sale.
Therefore it will pay you to display Swift's Premium Ham constantly. Keep a sign in plain sight all the time.
"WE SELL SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS."
The increase in sales will be large and steady for Swift's Premium Ham holds trade by its uniform quality.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XLIII.—Promote and Discharge.

Promote the good man and discharge the poor one.

The manager of a business who lives up to this plan of action will soon gather around him a bunch of people who will be loyal and can be depended upon no matter how great the pinch may be.

Your rival in business may have an especially good man in his employ who can be secured to your business by the offer of a higher salary, but will it pay you to pay him the price and bring him in over good men who have been loyal to you for years? Will not such a course put you in the position of hinting to all of your old employees that the loyalty of any salaried man belongs to the highest bidder for his immediate services, and induce him to figure with your rivals at the same time he is working for you?

Every real business manager realizes the fact that he must pay all he possibly can afford if he expects to keep a thoroughly competent working force, but many of them depend upon the pay alone to hold their men. There is much more to be thought of. The best men will in many cases work for less wages than they could command from other sources if they feel sure that their efforts will bring promotion. Good men are willing to prove themselves to be competent, and to wait for better things, if they feel sure they are not to be disappointed in the end, but bringing one new man in above them shatters all their confidence in a square deal, even if that new man happens to be the son of the manager, fresh from college, and long on athletic knowledge and short on business sense.

THIS STORE NETS $5,500 A YEAR.

Owner of an old-established grocery store in South Jersey, convenient to Philadelphia, is in bad health and wishes to retire. Will sell stock and fixtures at inventory. Store did $50,000 last year, every cent collected. Stock averages $2,500 and makes net profit of $5,000 to $6,000 a year. Uses two teams. Fixed charges low. Good dwelling connected. Real estate must be sold, but large mortgage can be left. Books will be shown for the last ten years. This grocer is rated at $20,000 and the stand is one of the best in South Jersey. The business can easily be increased.

That "Piano Advertising Plan" from Iowa

Pulls prosperity out of a lean year of panic. It never had an equal among advertising and premium propositions for building up trade in the teeth of a gale of adversity. It doubles sales for merchants and puts on subscriptions for the newspaper publisher. And it's brand new to-day

¶ The smallest merchant can work it just as successfully as the largest. The puzzle of it is that it does not cost the merchant one dollar but actually makes him big money.

¶ Nobody ever fails at this money-making enterprise who uses my plan and my pianos which are of uniformly excellent quality. I superintend the manufacture of them myself, so I know.

Live Ones—Write Me

¶ And let me tell you it would be suicidal for any merchant to give away a cheaply made, inferior piano to any customer if he wants to reap a permanent benefit from the enterprise.

¶ Here is a plan by which the merchant and publisher alike can turn hard times into hard cash, increase their business amazingly—literally make two dollars grow where there was one before—and pocket no possible loss for their thrift.

Needy Ones—Wake Up

I'll Show You How It's Done

SALESMEN—BOYS WITH GRIT AND "GO"—IT'S YOUR CHANCE. I want a few Reliable Salesmen to Canvas the Retail Trade. Samples in coat pocket. Don't worry trying to revive dead lines. Get one with breath in it now. It's a boom year for you if you connect right. Get wise to the "Iowa Idea." Mention this paper.

When you sat on the sticky fly paper you wished the folks had used which would be where you could not sit. Everybody that sees one wants one. So do the flies; they want it so bad that it catches more of them to the square inch than any other fly-catcher. It has almost three feet of fly-catching tape and clean place left over to grab it by and throw them all into the stove. It will pay you to stock Brown's Fly Coil, and you can sell them at a good profit.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Backwards and Forwards

You grocers know the ups and downs of the breakfast food business. You know how dozens and dozens of products have come on the market, filled your shelves and stayed there. Could we possibly point to a more convincing argument in favor of the quality of Egg-O-See and E-C Corn than the fact that the sales of both are constantly growing.

BADLY COOKED Versus WELL COOKED CORN

The reason Onarga Country Gentleman Corn has such a different flavor from other canned corn is not so much on account of the superiority of the corn, though we use the finest corn grown.

It is mainly due to the difference in the cooking. There was never a can of corn cooked by the old method that wasn't uneven—cooked too much in one place or not enough in another. Onarga Corn is cooked in the new automatic cooker, that cooks it all evenly, and the difference that this makes is the difference between any badly cooked and rightly cooked food.

"GET SOME"

We Have the Doctors Working for You!

They recommend Van Camp's Pork and Beans with Tomato Sauce for people who need richly nourishing food that is easily digested. Doctors know our beans are cooked scientifically.

The beans recommend themselves to every one who tries them on the strength of our heavy advertising.

We prove to thousands of women that Van Camp's Pork and Beans are cooked actually better than they can cook them at home in an ordinary oven.

So the sale is made and you only have to please them by having the beans they want. Better "Get Some."

Don't Throw Your Profits in the Cellar

A little of this and a little of that, left after the rush is over, is often put in the cellar because there isn't enough of it to make a respectable showing. These little "leftovers" represent your profits and you can't afford to let them rot in the cellar. A very little looks a lot in my Bins and you can get money for it. As I make them, they go to you from me at the one profit.

H. F. HEACOCK, 51 N. Second St., Phila., Pa.

Anker's
Bouillon Capsules

SEE THEM MELT!

Put a package of these on your counter, with a little card telling what they're are good for, and they'll melt away like snow. ANKER'S BOUILLON CAPSULES make bouillon, soup or beef tea, and everybody likes one of the three, especially when they're so delicious as they are. Ten capsules in a box—drop one in hot water. Good goods and a good profit.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

"The Can's the Thing"

¶ When we arranged to put out our Café des Gourmets Coffee we concluded that it must be put up in an air-tight package, so we decided that "the can's the thing" that would accomplish our purpose, so it is packed in handsomely labeled one-pound cans that not only protects the natural flavor and freshness, but keeps it so for an indefinite time.

¶ It is as near a perfect blend as our many years of experience could make and our usual guarantee goes with it.

¶ Sold to you at 25 cents a pound.

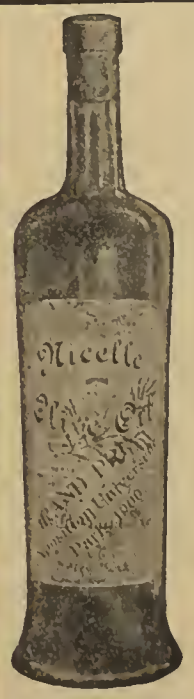
A Fixture You Need

Our Five-jar Fixture, one of the useful and ornamental fixtures you can have. Made in both oak and cherry, 3-coat finish. No old style hinges; but the lids lift and spring to right, thus completely exposing the contents.



Occupies no more room than a 4-jar fixture, is a silent salesman, and helps to make a grocer proud of his store. All trimmings nickeled.

Sell It Under Money Back Plan

We who make Nicelle Olive Oil have such an abounding confidence in its magnificent quality that we will refund the money to any purchaser who doesn't find Nicelle superior to any brand they have ever used.

Can confidence go further?

Nicelle is the very perfection of olive oil. It is the highest producible type of edible oil.

They Look Alike But Aren't

At first glance all starches look alike, both Laundry and Corn Starches. There is really a heap of difference, though it takes use to bring it out. In other words, if you sell a poor Starch your customer will find it out before you will.

Take our word for it, no Starch has ever been quite so fine and good as Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch. With manufacturing improvements of our own, and a genius for the most painstaking care, we are producing goods we are proud of.

Does it commend itself to you that we are independent of any Trust?

$3.00 FROM $1.50

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet has been on the market so long that it seems hardly necessary to speak of its quality; most people know it as the finest, cleanest rennet made.

Not all grocers know that they can double their money on this specialty, however—an unusual chance with an article so high-grade.

Costs $1.50 per dozen, brings back $3.00.

"The Pickles and Table Condiments prepared by The Williams Bros. Co., Detroit, Mich., are the very best. For sale by the wholesale trade all over the United States."

The Name Stands for Something

THERE is this to be said about carton butter—as a rule, as soon as it gets a name, it acquires a regularity that is almost always lacking if it is simply nameless print butter.

¶ That is because the manufacturer has taught the public that the name stands for something, and he must hold it up to the standard, or he destroys what he himself has built up.

¶ We have educated the trade to believe that Gurnse is the very finest dairy butter, clean and fancy, because rigidly inspected at every stage of the process. We must make every pound as good as that, and we do: First, because we have to; second, because it satisfies us better to do it.

¶ Wrapped in brine-dipped paper, then in pound cartons.

Packed in 30 and 50-pound boxes—pound and half pounds—28 cents.

Positively The Best Wagon Ever Built For the Grocery Trade

Strong, Easy-Running, Finest Steel Tires, Wheels Second-Growth Hickory

This wagon is exceedingly handsome and almost everlasting. There are more "J. M." wagons in use in Philadelphia than all other makes combined. We have a number of them ready for your name and colors.

Tell us your ideas of a wagon, we will send you a catalogue in which you will find something very much like it. If it isn't there, we will build it for you.

FULTON & WALKER CO. TWENTIETH and FILBERT STS. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"Show All—Sell All"

This is the idea of a store like this. Notice that everything is where customers can see it. These bins protect you from loss by dust, dirt or bugs. A bin full of sugar shows it is sugar, makes people want sugar, and keeps every grain of sugar in clean, salable condition. Let us make an estimate for you.

Losing Your Weights?

Get a Troemner No. 24 Ball Scale

Greatest Improvement in Rapid Weighing

Does away with weights absolutely. The balls are placed in the holes, thus weighing from one to fifteen pounds, with the sixteen ounces in fractions on the side beam, giving a total weighing capacity of sixteen pounds.

Want Some Comfort?

¶ It must certainly be a comfort when you buy future canned goods to know that you are going to get them.

¶ Buyers of Clover Farm and Blue Bell canned goods always have that comfort, for we sell them on a 100 per cent. contract.

¶ Isn't this worth considering, when you further remember that no finer goods than these are packed in Maryland.
